

ElizabethanDrama.org presents
the Annotated Popular Edition of

KING EDWARD THE FIRST
(aka EDWARD I)

by George Peele
Written c. 1590-3
First Published 1593

Featuring complete and easy-to-read annotations.

Annotations and notes © Copyright Peter Lukacs and ElizabethanDrama.org, 2019.
This annotated play may be freely copied and distributed.

KING EDWARD THE FIRST (aka EDWARD I)

By George Peele

Written c. 1590-3
First Published 1593

THE

Famous Chronicle of king Edward the first, surnamed Edward Longshanks, with his returne from the holdy land.

ALSO THE LIFE OF LLEVELLLEN
rebell in Wales

Lastly, the sinking of Queene Elinor, who sunck at Charingcrosse and rose again at Pottershith, now named Queenehith.

DRAMATIS PERSONS:

The English Royal Family:

Edward I, King of England, surnamed Longshanks.

Queen Elinor, Edward's consort.

Katherine, Elinor's Attendant.

Joan of Acon, their daughter.

Queen-Mother, consort of the deceased Henry III.

Edmund, Duke of Lancaster, Edward's brother,

Duchess of Lancaster, Edmund's Wife.

English Nobility:

Gilbert de Clare, Earl of Gloucester.

Earl of Sussex.

Mortimer, Earl of March.

Sir Thomas Spencer.

Cressingham.

Other English Characters:

Bishop.

Mayoress of London.

Lady Elinor, Daughter of Simon de Montfort.

Potter's Wife.

John, Servant to Potter's Wife.

INTRODUCTION to the PLAY

George Peele's Edward I is a sprawling epic of a play, containing an uneven mix of heightened drama, broad comedy, stage battles and single-combats, and even a little of the supernatural. Edward's wife, Queen Elinor, is unfairly portrayed as an increasingly deranged megalomaniac, and the Catholic Friar is a lecherously sinful monk; meanwhile, Welsh and Scottish rebels are perpetual thorns in the side of the heroic English monarch, who, patient, wise and courageous, tries to keep his kingdom and tragic family together - in other words, Edward I contains all the elements necessary to keep a demanding Elizabethan audience well-entertained.

NOTE on the TEXT'S SOURCE

The text of the play is adopted from Alexander Dyce's 1874 edition of Edward I, cited below at #3, with some of the spelling and wording from the 1593 quarto reinstated, and emendations of other commentators and editors further adopted.

NOTES on the ANNOTATIONS

Mention of Dyce, Bullen, Hook, and Dodsley in the annotations refers to the notes provided by these editors in their respective editions of our play; mention of Mitford

The Welsh:

Lluellen, Prince of Wales.

Sir David of Brecknock, Lluellen's Brother.

Rice ap Meredith, a Baron.

Owen ap Rice, a Baron.

Friar Hugh ap David.

Guenthian, the Friar's Wench.

Jack, Novice of the Friar.

Guenther, a Messenger.

Harper.

Farmer.

The Scots:

John Baliol, Elected King of Scotland.

Versses, a Lord.

English Lords, Scottish Lords, Welsh Barons, Ladies, Messengers, Soldiers, etc.

and Deighton refers to the notes of these commentators on Edward I.

The most commonly cited sources are listed in the footnotes immediately below. The complete list of footnotes appears at the end of this play.

1. Oxford English Dictionary (OED) online.

2. Crystal, David and Ben. Shakespeare's Words.

London, New York: Penguin, 2002.

3. Dyce, Rev. Alexander. The Dramatic and Poetical Works of Robert Greene and George Peele. London: George Routledge and Sons, 1874.

4. Bullen, A.H. The Works of George Peele, Vol. I. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Company, 1888.

5. Jones, Dan. The Plantagenets. New York: Penguin Books, 2012.

7. Hook, Frank S. ed. Edward I. The Dramatic Works of George Peele, Vol. 2. General ed. Charles T. Prouty. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1961.

9. Stephan, Leslie and Lee, Sydney, eds. Dictionary of National Biography. London: Smith, Elder, and Co., 1885-1900.

28. Dodsley, Robert, et al. A Select Collection of Old Plays, Vol. XI. London: Thomas White, Printer, 1827.

34. Translations of Peele's original Latin clauses are by classicist Alison Parker.

41. Mitford, the Reverend J. Gentleman's Magazine, February 1833.

42. Deighton, Kenneth. The Old Dramatists: Conjectural Readings. Westminster: Archibald Constable and Co., 1896.

45. Morris, Marc. A Great and Terrible King. New York: Pegasus Books, 2009.

Prelude I: The Baron's War of 1264-1267.

The Baron's War of Henry III's reign was as important in shaping the political landscape and attitudes of the noble classes in England in the late 13th century as World War II was in defining pretty much everything that went on in Europe for the two generations that grew up in the second half of the 20th century.

King Henry III (1207-1272, ruled 1216-1272) is largely remembered by history for his genuine piety, but he was a poor administrator and weak ruler. Out of money by the 1240's, he had developed the habit of making political concessions to the land's magnates in return for much-needed cash (in hindsight, the meetings of the barons with Henry can be seen as proto-parliamentary gatherings). But the barons were getting impatient with Henry's foreign schemes, and began to refuse him money.

The most absurd of Henry's plans was to spend the mind-boggling amount of 135,000 marks to raise an army to enforce the appointment of his second son Edmund as King of Sicily, a crown which the pope had been hawking around Europe to the highest bidder.

Even more offensive was the reign of terror brought to England by the immigration of Henry's wild French cousins, a group of relatives known collectively as the Lusignans. The barons came to despise these violent and proud kinsmen of the king, and demanded their expulsion.

In 1258, a frustrated party of barons demanded that Henry turn administration of England over to a council of chosen magnates. By 1259, broke and powerless, Henry was reduced to "blithering irrelevance" (Jones, p. 223).

The leader of the barons was an old war-horse named Simon de Montfort. Unhappy, or maybe just naturally impatient, with the situation of the early 1260's, Simon raised an army in 1263, and managed to take control of most of southern England in the next year. But Henry and his son Edward gathered their own forces, and began to recover the king's holdings through a series of successful sieges.

Feeling squeezed, de Montfort decided to risk all on a set battle, which took place at Lewes on 14 May 1264. Fortune smiled on the rebel army, which smashed the king's wing, earning victory on this day. Henry and Edward were taken prisoner; Henry would be forced to accompany de Montfort wherever he went, and Edward was imprisoned.

Simon de Montfort became the de facto ruler of England. However, his rapacious habits and uneven dispensing of justice quickly alienated many of his friends, and when the suspicion arose that de Montfort had his eye on the crown of England, his enemies took action.

The first step was taken by the Earl of Gloucester and the powerful marcher lord Roger Mortimer, who freed Edward from his captivity. A new royal coalition, led by Edward, raised a new powerful army, which soon cornered de Montfort's forces in Wales. Outnumbered 3 to 1, de Montfort was forced to battle at Evesham on 12 August 1265, where the rebels were smashed and de Montfort slain.

From these wars, Edward broke out as the new leader of England.

Prelude II: Prince Edward.

Henry III's wife Eleanor of Provence gave birth to her first son on either 17 or 18 June 1239 at Westminster Palace. The boy was named Edward after the king's hero, the pre-Norman English king Edward the Confessor.

Edward was married to Eleanor of Castile, brother of the Castilian King Alfonso X, in the Abbey of Santa María la Real de Las Huelgas in Spain in October 1254, when he 15 years old, and his bride only 13.

During 1257-8, Edward led armies for the first time as he tried to put down the first rebellion of the man who would long be a thorn in the English side, the Welsh prince Llewelyn (our play's Lluellen), with only mixed success.

1263 saw the first stirrings of a revolt of the barons, led by the Earl of Leicester Simon de Montfort. Edward raised an army, and fought a war of maneuver against the rebels over the next year. Events finally came to a head in the Battle of Lewes, in which Edward's wing smashed the opposing forces, but the royal army overall suffered a staggering defeat, leaving Henry in the hands of the barons, and Edward imprisoned.

The Earl of Gloucester, having quarreled with de Montfort, made an alliance with Roger Mortimer, and the pair managed to carry out the escape of Edward from baronial control. Raising a new and massive army, Edward crushed de Montfort at Evesham in the summer of 1265, the battle resulting in the rebel's death.

As a young man, Edward had been a bit of a trouble-maker, neglecting his estates, and seemingly overly-fond of "chivalrous exercises and pleasure";⁹ but during the baronial wars, he would develop into the wise and thoughtful leader the island needed to heal it after the long years of civil unrest.

The next few years saw Edward putting down minor rebellious resurgences, including a famous siege of Kenilworth Castle.

Edward's next major project was to go on Crusade to the Holy Land, which he planned to do in conjunction with France's pious Louis IX; when the English ships arrived at Aigues-Mortes on 29 September 1270, Edward found that the French had already departed, having chosen to sail to Tunis to carry on operations against the infidel.

The French Crusade was a catastrophe; Louis was dead, disease had decimated the French forces, and, having made peace with enemy, the French were ready to leave the African coast when the English arrived. The two fleets returned to Sicily, where a fierce storm destroyed the French ships, but left Edward's thirteen boats untouched (this "miracle" is referred to in our play).

Having refused to make peace with the Muslim enemy, Edward went on to Palestine with only 1000 men to pursue his Crusade. He spent a year in the Holy Land, where he relieved the siege of Acre, attacked and massacred the entire population of Nazareth, and won another victory at Haifa. However, his efforts were too little too late, and Edward pulled out stakes and sailed back to France in 1272 (the Holy Land would fall completely out of the hands of the Christian Europeans within two more decades), returning finally to England two years later.

A famous episode which occurred in Acre is worth noting here. Edward had been left alone with a trusted Muslim messenger, when the man pulled a knife and attacked Edward. The king blocked the thrust with his arm, which received a deep gash, and subdued his opponent, first kicking him, then wrestling the knife away from him, before stabbing him to death with his own weapon.

The prince's wound grew discoloured, and an Englishman offered to cut out what was likely putrefying flesh; the brave king underwent the operation, and fulfilled the Englishman's vow that if the king survived the cutting, he would be on his horse within a fortnight.

A legend grew out of this incident that Elinor had actually been the one to save Edward's life when she sucked the poison out of his arm, but no historian takes this story seriously.

Our play begins with Edward returning to England after an absence of four years.

Prelude III: The First Welsh Freedom Fighters (or) The Battling Gruffydd Brothers.

As the English kings and nobility began to make their presence felt in Wales through the 13th century, the Welsh naturally resented the outsiders' pressure. Hampering any Welsh resistance, however, was the fact that the mountainous land had no unified government, being ruled really by numerous petty princes, each protective of his own piece of the Welsh pie.

It wasn't until the 1250's that a leader arose who was powerful and charismatic enough to bring the entire region under the sway of a single man. This was Llywelyn ab Gruffydd, Wales' first hero, a man who as recently as 2001 had yet another statue of him raised in Wales.

On their father's death in 1244, Llywelyn and his brother Owain inherited the elder Llywelyn's lands in north-west Wales. Younger brothers Davydd and Rhodri (who doesn't seem to have taken part in the very noisy history of his brothers) were initially left out of the legacy.

In 1254, open war broke out between the brothers, and Llywelyn crushed his revolting siblings in a battle at Bryn Derwyn. Owain was captured, and Llywelyn kept him imprisoned for the next quarter century, effectively removing him from our story. Davydd fled to England, leaving Llywelyn as sole ruler of north-west Wales. Davydd and Llywelyn reconciled in 1257.

The subsequent years saw numerous perceived abuses by England's royal agents in the border lands ("the marches"), and Llywelyn, assuming the mantle of Welsh champion, in 1256 began his first campaign in which he invaded and devastated English-held lands. Strife would continue on-and-off (but mostly on) for more than a decade.

In 1257, England's King Henry III, with his son Edward, made a half-hearted attempt to subdue the rebellion, but the entire effort was mismanaged, a complete failure.

During the Barons' War of 1264-7, the marcher lords were firm supporters of Henry, which made it convenient for Llywelyn to form an alliance with Simon de Montfort, leader of the English rebels. For a period of time, de Montfort's effective control of England resulted in Welsh freedom from English harassment. But when de Montfort was finally defeated in 1265, and the Barons' War concluded in a decisive victory for the English royal family, it was time for Llywelyn to make peace with Henry as well.

In the latter stages of the Barons' War, Davydd had revolted a second time against his brother, and actually fought on Henry's side at the conclusive Battle of Evesham,

The resulting Treaty of Montgomery (1267) gave Llywelyn charge of the entire principality of Wales, as well as the title of Prince of Wales. However, the treaty required that the Welsh prince pay Henry both a huge indemnity and homage, the latter which he did in September at Montgomery. At this time, Davydd once again reconciled with his brother.

Peace reigned supreme until Henry died in 1272, at which point, with the heir apparent away on Crusade, Llywelyn refused to pay homage to the new (and absent) king, or to pay the next installment of his indemnity. Open rebellion did not break out again until after Edward returned to England's shores in 1274. This is the point at which our play begins.

A. The Character Assassination of Eleanor of Castile.

It was the grave misfortune of King Edward's wife Eleanor that she became a main character in a play written at the height of England's anti-Spanish hysteria of the late 16th century. In this period, two scurrilous ballads were printed, one (entitled A Warning-piece to England Against Pride and Wickedness) which made the queen out to be a cruel monster of epic proportions, and another (Queen Eleanor's Confession) which slandered Eleanor of Aquitaine, wife of Henry II.

This is bad news for Eleanor, but good news for us - because Peele incorporated most of the unbelievable incidents described in the ballads into Edward I, even crediting our Eleanor with the alleged sins of the earlier Eleanor! The result is a play which still makes the head spin, portraying as it does a villain as entertaining - and weird - as can be found in any Elizabethan play.

B. Edward I's Uneven Style.

You may wish to note how the play's writing style varies wildly both within and across scenes. Specifically, while much of the play is written in expected grandiose iambic pentameter, numerous scenes, especially those involving the Welsh characters, contain speeches of short lines of varying length, and jump back and forth between prose and verse seemingly at random. The quartos include a number of very long iambic lines as well.

Much of this is the fault of the quartos, in which many speeches of what are clear verse are written as prose, and much of the verse has no meter at all. Each editor has to decide the degree to which the speeches should be reorganized, if at all, from verse into prose, and vice versa; we have generally followed Dyce, who makes a moderate number of such rearrangements of the play's lines.

Peele seems to have gone to town with respect to rhyming couplets as well. Entire speeches weave in and out of using rhyming couplets seemingly at random. The Welsh characters frequently jump in and out of rhyme, and the short-lined speeches of the Welsh frequently rhyme across three, four, and once even perhaps a record nine lines.

C. The Error-Filled Quartos.

Edward I was published first in 1593, and then again in 1599, the latter edition containing some corrections and emendations, but both versions are ridden with countless typos and errors of various sorts. Mystery lines and misplaced stage directions abound.

Our policy is to stick with the original wording of a play as much as is practicable; however, Edward I requires significantly more emendation than is normal. In an effort to keep from overburdening the reader with too many notes identifying such fixing, we will incorporate later editors' changes without comment in those cases in which Peele's intended language is clear, as well as minor emendations to pronouns and the like.

But in those cases where an emendation requires an educated guess on the part of those editors as to the author's intent, we make note of them.

A further usual policy of ours is to make suggestions in the notes regarding pronunciation and modifications which will help the reader or performer achieve iambic rhythm where such rhythm at first glance appears to be lacking; however, such a high percentage of the lines that should be in iambic pentameter have extra or missing syllables, etc. that we have decided in the case of this play to abandon, with a few exceptions, making any such proposals.

D. Annotations in Italics.

Those annotations which appear in italics serve two different functions: they provide either:

- (1) biographical background on the characters, or
- (2) historical context for the events of the play, allowing the reader:

- (a) to see when in real time the events depicted in Edward I occurred, and
- (b) to know where Peele has deviated from historical reality, either by changing the timeline of events, or inventing action or characters out of thin air.

The most important thing to note is that it is not necessary to read the italicized annotations in order to understand the play.

E. Settings, Scene Breaks and Stage Directions.

The original quartos divide the play into 25 scenes, which organization we follow.

The original quartos do not contain asides or scene settings. We have indicated the asides following Dyce's suggestions; scene settings are the suggestions of the editor.

Finally, as is our normal practice, a good number of the quartos' stage directions have been modified, and others added, usually without comment, to give clarity to the action. Most of these changes are adopted from Dyce and Bullen.

KING EDWARD THE FIRST (aka EDWARD I)

By George Peele

Written c. 1590-3
First Published 1593

SCENE I.

The Royal Palace at Westminster.

Enter Gilbert de Clare (the Earl of Gloucester), with the Earl of Sussex, Mortimer (the Earl of March), and Sir David (Lluellen's brother) waiting on Eleanor (the Queen-Mother).

The Scene Settings: the quartos do not identify scene locations. All suggestions in this edition are those of the editor.

Immediate Backstory: it is August of the year 1274. Edward has been away from England for four years, ever since he departed for the Holy Land on Crusade in August 1270. As King Henry III's eldest son, Edward is the heir apparent. He does not know yet that his father has died while he has been away.

The characters initially on stage represent those who did not go on Crusade with Edward. They all, especially the Queen-Mother, eagerly await the arrival in London of the Crusaders.

Entering Characters: the focus of the entering group is the Queen-Mother, Eleanor of Provence, wife of the recently deceased English King Henry III. She is attended by two English lords, one marcher lord (a magnate who owns property, and is given exclusive rights over that property, on the Welsh border lands) and a Welsh knight.

Before the first line has even been spoken, Peele has taken liberties with history - there were no Earls of Sussex or March at the time our play begins:

Gilbert de Clare, the Earl of Gloucester, aged 31, is a man in his prime at the time our play begins; he is one of the richest and most powerful men in the realm.

We adopt the quartos' spelling of Gloucester over Glocester, following Dyce.³

The unnamed Earl of Sussex is presumably John de Warenne, now aged 43, who actually was the Earl of Surrey at the time of our play's opening, he not assuming the title of Earl of Sussex until 1282.

The Earl of March is Roger Mortimer, also now aged 43. Mortimer is a cousin of the Welsh rebel Lluellen, but he has always been loyal to the English crown, and an enemy of his cousin. We note that Mortimer actually only held the title of Baron of Mortimer at the time of our play; the rank of Earl of March did not exist until it was bestowed on Mortimer's grandson, also Roger Mortimer, in 1328 (this powerful latter Roger was a major character in Christopher

1 Qu. Mother. My Lord Lieutenant of Gloucester, and Lord Mortimer,

2 To do you honour in your sovereign's eyes,
 That, as we hear, is newly come a-land
4 From Palestine, with all his men-of-war
 (The poor remainder of the royal fleet,
6 Preserved by miracle in Sicil road,)

Go mount your coursers, meet him on the way:

8 Pray him to spur his steed; minutes are hours.

10 Until his mother see her princely son
 Shining in glory of his safe return. –

12 [Exeunt Gloucester and Mortimer.]

Marlowe's play Edward II).

Sir David is the brother of the Welsh rebel Lluellen, and a partisan of Welsh independence; he is, however, pretending to be disaffected from his brother, and loyal to the English crown, and so resides with the English court.

= the term Lord Lieutenant, which did not appear in England until the 16th century, was used to describe the role a noble might take on as acting sheriff of his county, and was also the title given the governor of Ireland.¹ Here, the title identifies Gloucester as the regent of England in the period between Henry III's death and the return of the itinerant Prince Edward from Crusade.⁷

= remaining portion.

5-6: a reference to a storm which had destroyed the French Crusading fleet in Sicily in 1570, but left the small English fleet of 13 ships untouched.

The Ninth Crusade: Edward's Crusade of 1570 was supposed to take place in cooperation with the French, but Louis IX had decided to embark to Tunis in North Africa to make war against the ruling Malmuks without waiting for Edward. The venture was a disaster, with Louis and much of his army being wiped out by the plague; by the time the English arrived at Tunis, the surviving French had already decided to abandon the Crusade, and both fleets returned to Sicily, the closest port. Unfortunately, the French were to suffer further calamity, as a storm annihilated their fleet as it sat in the harbour at Trapani on the island's west coast, even as the English ships remained unharmed.

Edward, unwilling to give up his dream of a Crusade, reembarked his small army and sailed on to Palestine without the French (Jones, p. 245).⁵

= large horses used in battle.

8: Pray...steed = "urge Edward to hurry up"; it seems the English have landed at Dover and are now on their way back to London, and the Queen-Mother is impatient to see her returning sons, Edward and his younger brother Edmund.

minutes are hours = "the minutes seems like hours"; the quarto prints minutes and hours, but and is usually emended to are.

The quartos are riddled with such errors; our text will adopt without comment the generally accepted emendations made by later editors, but will note wherever the incorporated changes are more speculative.

12: the two lords go to intercept and escort home Edward and his returning army as the royal forces make their way back to England's capital.

14	Illustrious England, ancient seat of kings,	14f: the Queen-Mother apostrophizes to England; her praises of the kingdom were meant to flatter the audience, and such encomiums appear frequently in the era's plays.
16	Whose chivalry hath royalized thy fame ,	= "made you famous". ¹
18	That sounding bravely through terrestrial vale , Proclaiming conquests, spoils, and victories, Rings glorious echoes through the farthest world;	16-18: briefly, news of English accomplishments has made its way to every corner of the world. The Queen-Mother presumably refers to the impressive efforts of Edward and his troops during the Crusade. through terrestrial vale = throughout the world. ¹
20	What warlike nation, trained in feats of arms, What barbarous people, stubborn , or untamed,	The reality was that by the time of Edward's Crusade in the late 13th century, the situation in Palestine was hopeless, as the Christians had been reduced to holding only the city of Acre, when at one time they had ruled over an impressive slice of the region, including the cities of Jerusalem, Edessa and Antioch. Though the English bravely fought the local Malmuks when they could, little was ultimately accomplished, other than postponing the inevitable, the fall of Christianity's last outpost at Acre, which took place less than two decades after the English departed, in 1291.
22	What climate under the meridian signs ,	20: barbarous people = a term used to describe any of the world's uncivilized peoples, which to 16th century Englanders meant anyone beyond western Europe. stubborn = untamable, fierce. ¹
24	Or frozen zone under his brumal stage ,	21: climate = ie. land. the meridian signs = the southern constellations, ie. the southern half of the world.
26	Erst have not quaked and trembled at the name Of Britain and her mighty conquerors? Her neighbour realms, as Scotland, Denmark, France, Awed with their deeds, and jealous of her arms, Have begged defensive and offensive leagues .	22: ie. "or in the coldest parts of the earth", meaning the poles. his = ie. the sun's. ⁷ brumal = wintry. ¹ stage = literature had long described the world as a stage . = recently. ¹ = ie. the deeds of the mighty conquerors of line 24. ⁴
28	Thus Europe, rich and mighty in her kings, Hath feared brave England, dreadful in her kings.	27: Hook ⁷ identifies some complicated diplomatic activity from 1590 to which Peele is likely referring in this line; the details are not interesting enough to enter into here, as they have no connection to Edward I. leagues = alliances.
30	And now, to eternize Albion's champions	= full of dread over, ie. terrified of.
32	Equivalent with Trojans' ancient fame, Comes lovely Edward from Jerusalem , Veerung before the wind, ploughing the sea; His stretchèd sails filled with the breath of men	30: to eternize = "to immortalize"; the two words may be condensed to t' eternize for the sake of the meter. Albion's = Albion was an ancient name for the island of Britain. 31: England today is as famous as Troy was in its day. = ie. the Holy Land.

	That through the world admires his manliness .	35: through = throughout. his manliness = Edward's physical appearance was famously intimidating, if not terrifying: though frequently ill during childhood, Edward had grown to a magnificent height of six-foot-two-inches, "broad-chested and powerful" (Jones, p. 236). There was even a legend about Edward that "in a fit of rage, he once actually frightened a man to death" (p. 236).
36	And, lo , at last arrived in Dover-road ,	36: lo = behold. Dover-road = after landing at the port city of Dover, Edward and his returning army are believed to be on this well-trod road connecting Dover to London. ⁶
	Longshank[s] , your king, your glory, and our son ,	37: Longshanks = Edward's famous nickname, bestowed on him for his great height. In fact, the quartos refer to Edward as Longshanks in their stage directions and identify the speaker of his lines as " Long. " and " Longsh. ". We prefer to refer to him by his more dignified Christian name. our son = ie. "my son"; The Queen-mum assumes the royal "we".
38	With troops of conquering lords and warlike knights, Like bloody-crested Mars , o'erlooks his host ,	39: bloody...Mars = the Roman god of war, wearing his blood-smeared helmet. o'erlooks his host = "peers over his army".
40	Higher than all his army by the head, Marching along as bright as Phoebus' eyes !	40: a reference to Edward's stature. = ie. the sun; Phoebus is an alternate name for Apollo, the god of the sun. It was more common in literature to refer to Phoebus' eye , in the singular.
42	And we, his mother, shall behold our son, And England's peers shall see their sovereign.	45: enter the train = the parade of returning veterans enters the stage. viz = meaning "namely" or "to wit"; an English adaptation of videlicet . = helmets.
44	The trumpets sound, and enter the train, viz,	47: garlands = wreaths of flowers. red-cross...coat = soldiers going on Crusade to the Holy Land traditionally sewed a cross-shaped piece of cloth (often, but not exclusively, red) onto their outer garments. = the Ancient is the army's ensign, or standard-bearer; our Ancient seems to be an honoured and elder veteran, who as a symbol of the army is carried in on a seat or litter of some kind. = banner.
46	Edward's maimed soldiers with head-pieces and garlands on them, every man with his red-cross on	= a direction for the play's producer: all the actors should be onstage for this scene!
48	his coat; the Ancient borne in a chair, his garland	Entering Characters: Edward , the eldest son of Henry III, enters the stage. Born in 1239, he is now 35 years old, in the prime of his life. His wife Elinor , a Spanish princess, actually accompanied Edward on the Crusade. She is about 33 years old at this time. We adopt the quartos' spelling of Elinor over Eleanor ,
50	and his plumes on his head-piece, his ensign in his hand. Enter after them Gloucester and Mortimer bare-headed, and others, as many as may be.
52	Then enter Edward and his wife Elinor, Edmund Crouchback (the Duke of Lancaster), and Joan, and Elinor de Montfort (the Duke of Leicester's daughter, and prisoner), and Almeric de Montfort her brother, with Sailors and Soldiers. following Dyce.

Edmund is Edward's brother and his junior by six years. The source of Edmund's nickname Crouchback (an appellation usually reserved for hunchbacks) has remained uncertain: perhaps he had a deformity of the back, or perhaps he received the name because of his having taken the cross (crouch was an old English word meaning "cross") on Crusade. In the 14th century, the famous prince John of Gaunt pushed the theory that Edmund was deformed, even claiming that Edmund had actually been born before Edward, and would have become England's king, had he not been passed over because of his crippled state.⁹

Edmund actually had returned from the Crusade after its formal conclusion in 1572,⁴ though Edward would delay his return home by two more years.

Joan is a daughter of Edward and Elinor. She was actually born in Acre in Palestine during the English Crusade in April 1272, and was hence known as Joan of Acre. In our play, Joan is already a mature woman, though in reality she would have been only two years old at the time of the Crusaders' return.

55-57: Elinor and Almeric de Montfort are offspring of the Earl of Leicester Simon de Montfort, the man who led the Barons' Revolt against Henry III. They have been captured trying to make their way to Wales to join the rebel Welshman Lluellen (details coming up in Scene II).

However, as Elinor and Almeric play no role in this scene, and neither their identities nor presence on the stage are explained to the audience, a director may choose to simply omit them from the scene. Almeric, in fact, makes no further appearance in the play.

45-57: we note that the quartos' long stage direction here is at points incomprehensible; we have adopted the modified version written by Bullen.⁴

= likely an error; The Queen-Mother presumably should be calling for Edmund and Edward - her two returning sons - but not Gloucester.

≡ swoons, faints.

58

Gloster! Edward! O my sweet sons!

60

[And then she falls and sounds.]

62

K. Edw. Help, ladies! – O ingrateful destiny,
To welcome Edward with this tragedy!

66

Gloc. Patient, your highness: 'tis but mother's love Received with sight of her thrice-valiant sons. —

68

Madam, amaze not: see his majesty
Returned with glory from the holy land.

70

Qu. Mother. Brave sons, the worthy champions of our

God,
The honourable soldiers of the Highest.

67: Received = Dyce prefers, and emends this to, Ravished, meaning "emotionally overwhelmed"; Hook suggests renewed.

thrice-valiant = thrice was commonly used as here as an intensifier.

¹ "don't be stupefied or filled with wonder."

74 Bear with your mother, whose abundant love
With tears of joy salutes your sweet return
From famous journeys hard and fortunate.
76 But, lords, alas, how heavy is our loss
Since your departure to these Christian wars!
78 The king your father, and the prince your son,
And your brave uncle, Almain's emperor,
80 Ay me, are dead!

78-80: Henry III, Edward's father, had died on 16 November 1272.

Edward and Elinor's first son, John, born in 1266, had died 3 August 1271.

Henry's junior brother Richard of Cornwall had been elected Emperor of the Holy Roman Empire (technically known as King of the Romans) by a generously-bribed four-elector majority (out of a total of seven) in 1257, but a dissident group of three equally well-paid electors chose Alfonso X of Castile instead. The pair ruled simultaneously, though Richard never exercised any significant power in his realm on the continent. Having spent most of his reign living in England, Richard died 2 April 1272 at Berkhamstead.^{8,9}

Almain's (line 79) = Germany's.

Elinor's Children: Elinor had previously given birth to a stillborn daughter in 1255 when she was only 13, then daughters again in 1264 and 1265, each of which also died without reaching their first birthdays. Elinor's second son, Henry, born in 1268, was six years old at the time of the Crusaders' arrival in England, but would be dead by October. The royal couple's first child to live to adulthood was to be their sixth, another Eleanor, who would be born in 1269. Elinor actually had given birth to two children while on Crusade, the first, Juliana, in 1271, who died the same year, then Joan, in 1272, the eighth of the royal couple. Elinor would go on to have a total of at least 14 pregnancies reach term, and perhaps as many as 16 (Morris, p. 436)⁴⁵

82 K. Edw. Take comfort, madam; leave these sad laments:
Dear was my uncle, dearer was my son.
84 And ten times dearer was my noble father;
Yet, were their lives valued at thousand worlds,
86 They cannot scape the arrest of dreadful Death,

Death that doth seize and summon all alike.

= ie. even if.

86-87: Death is personified.

the arrest = may be abbreviated to th' arrest for the sake of the meter.

82-87: Edward Learns of his Father's Death: after Henry died in November 1272, the messengers who had been sent to inform Edward met the heir apparent at Sicily on the latter's return from the Holy Land. Surprisingly, Edward displayed no signs of anxiety to hurry home to claim the throne; instead, trusting the management of the English government to his ministers, Edward "took his time returning to England", remaining on the continent "to enjoy the fruits of his glamorous Crusader reputation. He joined in French tournaments, paid homage to Philip III for his French lands, and settled the rumblings of rebellion in Germany", not returning to England for two more years (Jones, pp. 246-7).

88	Then, leaving them to heavenly blessedness,	= throughout the play, Heaven is pronounced in a single syllable (He'a'n) and heavenly is a disyllable (hea'n-ly), with the medial v essentially omitted.
90	To join in thrones of glory with the just, I do salute your royal majesty,
92	My gracious mother-queen, and you, my lords, Gilbert de Clare, Sussex and Mortimer,
94	And all the princely states of England's peers, With health and honour to your hearts' content. –
96	And welcome, wishèd England, on whose ground These feet so often have desired to tread:	95-96: Edward apostrophizes to his native land. wished = ie. wished-for.
	Welcome, sweet queen, my fellow-traveller,
98	Welcome, sweet Nell , my fellow-mate in arms,
	Whose eyes have seen the slaughtered Saracens	97: as mentioned earlier, Elinor had accompanied her husband on his Crusade and subsequent residency on the continent.
100	Piled in the ditches of Jerusalem: –	= common nickname for Elinor, a contraction of mine Elinor .
102	And lastly welcome, manly followers , That bears the scars of honour and of arms, And on your war-drums carry crowns as kings,	= generic term used to describe any and all of the Arab or Muslim enemies of the Crusaders in Palestine.
104	Crown mural , naval , and triumphant all;	100: it does not appear Edward fought anywhere near Jerusalem. = ie. Edward's returning soldiers. Note the lack of subject-verb agreement between followers and bears (line 102). = military decorations in the shapes of crowns.
	At view of whom the Turks have trembling fled,	104: Edward lists various types of crowns which had been awarded to his soldiers: 1. crown mural = a gold crown, adorned with battlements, awarded to the first man to scale a wall of a besieged town. ¹ 2. naval crown = a gold crown, decorated with the beaks of ships, awarded to the victor of a naval battle. ¹ 3. triumphant crown = ie. a triumphal crown, awarded to victorious generals. ^{1,10}
106	Like sheep before the wolves , and Saracens Have made their cottages in walled towns;	105: the dominant power in the Middle East, and hence the foe of the English during the Ninth Crusade, was the warrior-class known as the Mamluk dynasty. Since the 1240's, Turkish slaves, known as Mamluks, had formed the backbone of the armies of the Muslim nations of the Middle East. A brilliant Mamluk military strategist of the Egyptian army named Baybars led a successful coup against the Sultan of Egypt in 1260, and Baybars went on rule Egypt and Syria until he died in 1277, after accidentally drinking a cup of poison meant for someone else. ¹²
108	But bulwarks had no fence to beat you back. –	= the quartos print walles , emended by Mitford. ⁴¹
	Lords, these are they will enter brazen gates,	107: ie. the Muslim enemies had remained safely protected within walled towns, so as to avoid meeting Edward in battle.
110	And tear down lime and mortar with their nails:	108: "but ramparts and fortifications (bulwarks) offered no protection (fence) against your determined assaults."
		109: "my lords, these are the soldiers that have broken through brass (brazen) gates". = the cement used to hold the stones of walls together.

	Embrace them, barons: these have got the name Of English gentlemen and knights-at-arms; Not one of these but in the champaign field	112
114	Hath won his crown, his collar , and his spurs.
116	Not Caesar, leading though the streets of Rome The captive kings of conquered nations, Was in his princely triumphs honoured more
118	Than English Edward in this martial sight. Countrymen,
120	Your limbs are lost in service of the Lord, Which is your glory and your country's fame:
122	For limbs you shall have living , lordships , lands,
124	And be my counsellors in war's affairs. Soldiers, sit down. – Nell, sit thee by my side. –
	These be Prince Edward's pompous treasury.
126	[The Queen-Mother being set on the one side, and Elinor on the other, Edward sitteth in the middest, mounted highest, and at his feet the ensign underneath him.]
128	O glorious Capitol ! beauteous senate-house!
130	Triumphant Edward, how, like sturdy oaks, Do these thy soldiers circle thee about, To shield and shelter thee from winter's storms!
132	Display thy cross, old Aimès of the Vies: Dub on your drums, tannèd with India's sun ,
134
136
138	My lusty western lads: Matrevers, thou Sound proudly here a perfect point of war
140	In honour of thy sovereign's safe return. Thus Longshanks bids his soldiers Bien venu .
142	[Use drums and trumpets and ensigns.]
144	O God, my God, the brightness of my day, How oft hast thou preserved thy servant safe, By sea and land, yea, in the gates of death!
113: but = with Hath in line 114, "has not". champaign field = ie. open countryside. ²
= "the ornamental chain which forms part of the insignia of orders of knighthood" (OED, collar , noun, sense 3b).
115-6: the Romans famously paraded the fettered leaders of their defeated enemies through the streets of Rome.
122: For limbs = ie. "in replacement for your lost limbs". living = pensions. lordships = noble titles.
125: ie. "these soldiers are my splendid (pompous) ² treasury."
= middle. ie. the Ancient, or standard-bearer.
132: an odd and unexpected reference to Roman landmarks; the Capitol could refer to one of Rome's seven hills, or to the Temple of Jupiter; Edward may be alluding to the palace at Westminster.
136-140: Edward recognizes two individuals, one of whom is a trumpeter, and the drummers of his army.
137: Dub = beat. India's sun = Edward's geography is imprecise: he presumably simply means "Asia's sun".
139: "play (sound) a brief military refrain (on your trumpet)". point of war = a short bit of martial music. ⁴
= French for "welcome".
Most of the kings prior to Edward's reign may have not spoken any English; Edward, however, is believed to have been taught English as a child. The government's official language remained French, as it had been ever since the Normans had invaded and taken over administration of the country in 1066, until 1362, when, by statute, English became the official language of Parliament. ¹¹
= the instruments play, the banner is presented.

194

Suss. And yet, Sir David, ye amble after apace.

196

K. Edw. Well said, David; thou couldst not be a Camber-Briton, if thou didst not love a soldier with thy heart. Let me see now if my arithmetic will serve to total the particulars.

200

202

Qu. Elin. Why, my lord, I hope you mean I shall be a benefactor to my fellow-soldiers.

204

K. Edw. And well said, Nell! what wilt thou I set down for thee?

208

Qu. Elin. Nay, my lord, I am of age to set it down for myself. You will allow what I do, will you not?

210

K. Edw. That I will, madam, were it to the value of my kingdom.

214

Qu. Elin. What is the sum, my lord?

216

K. Edw. Ten thousand pounds, my Nell.

218

Qu. Elin. Then, Elinor, bethink thee of a gift worthy the King of England's wife and the King of Spain's daughter, and give such a largess that the chronicles of this land may crake with record of thy liberality.

220

222

Parturiunt montes, nasceretur ridiculus mus.

224

[She makes a cipher.]

pounds, only one pound less than Sussex, as he himself points out.

an ace = by one.²

= the sense seems to be, "you are keeping up with me."

amble = keep an easy pace, usually said of a ridden animal such as a horse.¹

apace = with speed.¹

= ie. true Welshman, with a nod to the Welsh origins in the early Britanic peoples of the island. Cambria is the ancient name for Wales.

= ie. individual amounts.

202-3: Elinor reminds her husband that she has not yet had her turn to reward the soldiers; as a Crusader herself - and one who had two full-term pregnancies during her time in Acre - Elinor no doubt feels her own bond to the men, and consequent obligation to make an individual donation.

= "what do you want me to mark or write".

208-9: Elinor wants to write down herself the amount she intends to give.

I am of age = "I am old enough". Though now 33, we may note that Elinor was only 13 years old when she married Edward, who himself was only two years her senior.

= "even if it were an amount equal to".

= ie. total so far.

= "think up".

219-220: the King of Spain's daughter = Elinor's father was King Ferdinand III of Castile, her mother Joan, Countess of Ponthieu; through her father, Elinor was actually the great-great-granddaughter of England's Henry II and Eleanor of Aquitaine.

220: largess = generous gift.

chronicles = the term used to describe the registry of historical events of the earlier days.

221: crake = crow or squawk, usually said of a bird, ie. boast.^{1,3} liberality = generosity.

222: Latin: "the mountains are in labour, a ridiculous mouse will be born." From the Ars Poetica of the Roman poet Horace. The expression was used to describe works that originally promise much but deliver little.¹³

224: Elinor adds a zero at the end of the sum Edward has written!

226	There, my lord; neither one, two, nor three, but a poor cipher in agrum , to enrich good fellows, and	= the figure of a zero, a corruption of the term cipher in algorism ; algorism is in turn a corruption of the surname of the 10th century Persian mathematician Muhammad ibn Musa al-Khwarizmiel. ⁴
228	compound their figure in their kind.	228: something like, "unite my zero with its fellows." figure = mathematical symbol. ¹
230	K. Edw. Madam, I commend your composition , an argument of your honourable disposition. Sweet	= "approve what you have written". = evidence.
232	Nell, thou shouldst not be thyself, did not, with thy mounting mind, thy gift surmount the rest.	232-3: the sense is that Elinor, being who she is, could not have done other than what she did, ie. outdo everybody else in generosity.
234	Gloc. Call you this ridiculus mus ? Marry , sir, this	235: ridiculus mus = "ridiculous mouse"; Gloucester is stunned by the size of the gift. Marry = an oath, derived from the Virgin Mary.
236	mouse would make a foul hole in a fair cheese. 'Tis but a cipher in agrum, and it hath made of ten thousand	236-8: 'Tis but...pounds = "it is only a zero, but it turned 10,000 pounds into 100,000!"
238	pounds a hundred thousand pounds .	= The numbers thrown around so cavalierly by Edward and Elinor represent enormous sums of money. For comparison, the largest tax ever imposed on England in the Middle Ages yielded £116,000 (this in 1290) under Edward I. His wars in the mid-1290's cost £54,000 (Jones, p. 274-287).
240	Lanc. A princely gift and worthy memory.	242-5: Gloucester seems to have been assigned a regency of sorts, and on Henry's death took temporary physical possession of the crown, to hold until Edward's return. as erst (line 242) = since earlier.
242	Gloc. My gracious lord, as erst I was assigned Lieutenant to his majesty, here render I up the crown,	The administration of the state in the period between Henry's death and Edward's return from France was actually in the hands of Roger Mortimer, the Archbishop of York, and Roger Burnell.
244	left in charge with me by your princely father King Henry;	Roger Burnell was a cleric who, despite his exceptional talents, could expect only a limited future in the church, considering he had a mistress and three bastard children. But his gifts for administration were so great that in 1270, Edward appointed Burnell to be a manager of his affairs during the prince's absence on Crusade. On his return four years later, Edward appointed Burnell chancellor, a position Burnell held till his death in 1292 (Morris, p. 117).
246	Who on his death-bed still did call for you, And dying willed to you the diadem.	247: on his death-bed, Henry confirmed his desire for Edward to succeed him.
248	K. Edw. Thanks, worthy lord:	= the judgment.
250	And seeing by doom of heavens it is decreed, And lawful line of our succession,	= Heaven.
252	Unworthy Edward is become your king, We take it as a blessing from on high .	= order.
254	And will our coronation be solémnizèd Upon the fourteenth of December next.	255: actually, Edward was crowned on 19 August, only

Qu. Elin. Upon the fourteenth of December next!
 258 Alas, my lord, the time is all too short
 And sudden for so great solemnity:
 260 A year were scarce enough to set a-work
 Tailors, embroiderers, and men of rare device,
 262 For preparation of so great estate.
 Trust me, sweet Ned, hardly shall I bethink me
 264 In twenty weeks what fashion robes to wear.
 I pray thee, then, defer it till the spring,
 266 That we may have our garments point-device.
 I mean to send for tailors into Spain,
 268 That shall confer of some fantastic suits
 With those that be our cunning'st Englishmen.

seventeen days after his arrival in England. The entire subsequent conversation in which Elinor successfully persuades her husband to delay the coronation ceremony is a complete fiction, designed to begin to establish the selfish personality of the new queen.

One of the play's primary story-lines is the increasingly insane actions of Edward's Queen Elinor. Peele borrowed all of the incidents which paint Elinor in such a poor light from a pair of ballads printed roughly around the time Peele wrote this play (see Note A in the Introduction).

= excellent ideas (in design).
 = perhaps "pomp" (of ceremony).
 = have time to consider or decide upon.

= precise or scrupulous, an adjective.^{1,3}

268: "that shall provide for us extravagant or showy outfits".

269: according to the ballad A Warning-piece to England, Elinor wanted to import Spanish tailors to design her clothing, because "No English tailor here could serve / To make her rich attire."

With those = ie. together with those.

= vaunt, show-off.

272: content ye = either "be satisfied", or "satisfy yourself."
would...care = "if only this were our greatest source of anxiety (care)."

274-5: Englishmen...every way = Edward refers to the famous - and sometimes notorious - ability of the English to borrow and adapt fashion from the continent.

change = exchange.

rare devices = excellent ideas.

277: "please", often written as "prithee" or "prethee".
 = companion.

283: 'Twill...leisure = ie. "this is going to take a long time".
daughter = ie. Elinor, as her daughter-in-law.
 = fastidious.¹

286-8: since more important issues than this don't cause Edward and Elinor to fall to quarreling, Edward readily grants Elinor's request.

'Twixt = between.

breaks no square = causes no offense or harm.^{1,4}

it = ie. Edward's coronation robe.

may beseem = is fitting or appropriate for.

270 What, let me brave it now or never, Ned!

K. Edw. Madam, content ye: would that were greatest care!

You shall have garments to your heart's desire.
 274 I never read but Englishmen excelled
 For change of rare devices every way.

Qu. Elin. Yet pray thee, Ned, my love, my lord, and king, 278 My fellow-soldier, and compeer-in-arms,
 Do so much honour to thy Elinor,
 280 To wear a suit that she shall give thy grace;
 Of her own cost and workmanship perhaps.

Qu. Mother. 'Twill come by leisure, daughter, then, I fear:
 284 Thou'rt too fine-fingered to be quick at work.

K. Edw. 'Twixt us a greater matter breaks no square,
 So be it such, my Nell, as may beseem
 288 The majesty and greatness of a king. –

290 And now, my lords and loving friends,
Follow your general to the court,
After his travels, to repose him then,
292 There to recount with pleasure what is past
Of war's alarums, showers, and sharpest storms.
294

= meaning himself.

292-3: Edward plans to pleasurable recall incidents and tell stories of the Crusade with his noble guests.

alarums = calls to arms.

showers = volleys or barrages of arrows or other missiles.¹

sharpest storms = fiercest volleys of arrows, etc.¹

[Exeunt all except Queen Elinor and Joan.]

296 Qu. Elin. Now, Elinor, now England's lovely queen, 298 Bethink thee of the greatness of thy state,
300 And how to bear thyself with royalty
Above the other queens of Christendom;
That Spain reaping renown by Elinor,
302 And Elinor adding renown to Spain,
Britain may her magnificence admire. –
304 I tell thee, Joan, what time our highness sits
Under our royal canopy of state,
306 Glistening with pendants of the purest gold.
Like as our seat were spangled all with stars,
308 The world shall wonder at our majesty,
As if the daughter of eternal Ops,
310 Turned to the likeness of vermilion fumes,
Where from her cloudy womb the Centaurs leapt,
312 Were in her royal seat enthronized.

297f: Elinor addresses herself again.

= consider. = status.

301-2: Spain's reputation grows thanks to Elinor, stated twice!

= ie. "when I [finally can] sit".

= glistening.

= as if. = adorned, decorated.

309-313: "as if I were Juno (the queen of the gods) - she who when she was transformed into a cloud, gave birth to the Centaurs (the well-known race of half-men half-horses) - sitting on her throne."

309: Juno was the daughter of Ops,⁷ Ops seems to be identified with Rhea, the wife of Saturn, and therefore the mother of the Olympian gods.¹⁴

310-311: the reference here, which make it sound as if Juno herself had been turned into a cloud, in which form she gave birth to the Centaurs, is mythologically unsound, and perhaps these lines may be omitted.

The story actually goes as follows: Jupiter wanted to test whether Ixion, the king of Lapithae, was interested in his wife Juno, so he turned the nymph Nephele into a cloud, or phantom, resembling his wife. Ixion proved himself untrustworthy when he raped Nephele, the result of which was the birth of the Centaurs.¹⁵

Even if it were Juno who had undergone the experience described in lines 310-1, it is difficult to imagine what purpose there could be for Elinor to compare herself to Juno in this way.

vermilion fumes = bright red vapours,¹ ie. clouds.

= ie. the fact that she is now Queen of England.

= affable in temperament, of gentle disposition.¹

= ie. begin to.

= demonstrating scorn towards the regular folks who innately love the royal family.

= "that king would be better off living".

314 Joan. Madam, if Joan thy daughter may advise,
316 Let not your honour make your manners change.
The people of this land are men of war,
318 The women courteous, mild, and debonair;
Laying their lives at princes' feet
That govern with familiar majesty.
320 But if their sovereigns once gin swell with pride,
Disdaining commons' love, which is the strength
322 And sureness of the richest commonwealth,
That prince were better live a private life

324	Than rule with tyranny and discontent.
326	Qu. Elin. Indeed, we count them headstrong Englishmen;	326: "I account the English people to be obstinate."
328	But we shall hold them in a Spanish yoke,	= ie. "go home in order to".
	And make them know their lord and sovereign.
330	Come, daughter, let us home for to provide	= ie. be set to work in creating the fashionable attire that
	For all the cunning workmen of this isle	will adorn the king and queen in the coronation cere-
	In our great chamber shall be set a-work,	mony.
332	And in my hall shall bountifully feed.	333-4: the lines sound at first blush as if the sea-nymph
334	My king, like Phoebus , bridegroom-like, shall march	Thetis is marrying the sun-god Phoebus , and leading him to
	With lovely Thetis to her glassy bed ,	her bridal bed; but glassy bed actually refers to the sea, so that the simile of 333-4 simply means that Edward will appear as magnificent as the sun setting on the ocean as he proceeds down the aisle of Westminster Abbey to be crowned.
		Thetis = printed incomprehensibly as Xheois in the quartos, but contemporary citations indicate clearly Thetis is meant:
		1588: " clere phoebus arising from the fouldest armes of faire thetis "; also 1588: " awaighting when phoebus would go bathe himself with thetis. " Thetis actually married Peleon, King of the Myrmidons, and became mother of Achilles.
		= onlookers; looker-on was very common from the mid-16th century through the 18th century, onlooker not gaining popularity until the 1650's.
336	And all the lookers-on shall stand amazed	= emended by Bullen to loftily , Dyce to royally . We have a
	To see King Edward and his lovely queen	likely situation here of a common error made in printing at Sit lovely in England's stately throne.	the time, in which the eye of the inattentive copier or typesetter catches and inserts a word from a previous line in place of the correct word, forever losing the author's original word.
	[Exeunt.]	Elinor Postpones the Crowning Ceremony: Elinor's display of vanity and desire for ostentation expressed in her conversation with Joan, as well as her selfish insistence on delaying the crowning ceremony, have the effect of turning her into a despicable character in the eyes of the audience; and her inconsideration, pomposity and expressions of self-importance will increase as the play continues, ultimately reaching absurd proportions.
		This characterization is the result of the great unpopularity of the Spanish in England in the late 16th century. The English fleet had recently crushed the Spanish Armada (1588), and amongst rumours of attempted poisonings of the queen and the recent entrance of England into the war in the Spanish Netherlands, the Spanish made for an easy stage-target; it is because of Elinor's heritage as a princess of the ruling family of Aragon that Peele found cause to turn her into a great, if sometimes weird (as we shall see), comic villain.

SCENE II.

Milford-Haven, Wales.

*Enter Lluellen (the Prince of Wales),
Rice ap Meredith, Owen ap Rice, with swords and bucklers, and frieze jerkins.*

Backstory: during the Barons' War (1264-7, see Note B at the beginning of the play), the powerful Welsh lord Lluellen ap Gruffudd had allied with Simon de Montfort and the barons against Henry III, taking advantage of the turbulence of the times to increase his control over north-west Wales. At the war's conclusion, Henry, having settled with the English barons, also concluded with the Welsh the Treaty of Montgomery (1267), which made Lluellen the sole ruler over all of Wales, in return for which he was to pay a tribute of 25,000 marks to the English crown. Lluellen was granted the title Prince of Wales, and almost every other Welsh noble was made a vassal of the new prince.

After Edward returned to England in 1274, Lluellen began to openly provoke the king, refusing to pay the required tribute, ignoring Edward's requests to come to London, and invading English baronies both in the Welsh marches and across the border into England itself (Jones, p. 253).

Entering Characters: Lluellen is the most powerful noble in all of Wales, having been recognized as the Prince of Wales in the Treaty of Montgomery of 1267. Owen ap Rice and Rice ap Meredith are noble followers of the prince.

The Welshmen are wearing military accoutrement to indicate that they are in a state of rebellion against the English crown.

Due to the confusion of names, Rice ap Meredith will be identified by his surname, Meredith, and Owen ap Rice by his given name, Owen.

We may note that the real Lluellen had a real brother named Owain, or Owen, but our Owen is not him.

bucklers = small round shields.¹

frieze jerkins = close fitting jackets (jerkins) made of a rough woolen cloth.^{1,2}

- 1 Lluel. Come, Rice, and rouse thee for thy country's good:
- 2 Follow the man that means to make you great;
Follow Lluellen, rightful Prince of Wales,
- 4 Sprung from the loins of great Cadwallader,
Descended from the loins of Trojan Brute.

1f: Lluellen opens the scene by addressing his follower Rice ap Meredith.
= meaning himself.
= the first person to be given the title of Prince of Wales had been Owain Gwynedd, in 1165.⁴⁷

4-5: "descended from Cadwallader, who in turn was a descendant of Brute."

Cadwallader was a 12th century prince of northern Wales.

Brute, the mythical great-grandson of the Trojan hero Aeneas, founded, along with his collection of fugitive Trojan descendants, a colony on Britain, and became the Britons' first king. He arranged for his three sons to rule on his death, with the region now known as Wales falling to Brute's son Camber; from this time, according to the legend, the area was called Cambria.

The legendary history of the early British kings was collected by one Geoffrey of Monmouth (1100? - 1154), an educated man whose Historia Regum Britanniae (History of the Kings of Britain) became the source of the popular tales

6 And though the traitorous Saxons, Normans, Danes,
7 Have pent the true remains of glorious Troy
8 Within the western mountains of this isle, of King Arthur.

6-8: Lluellen rues the process by which the island of Britain had been successfully populated by invading tribes from Europe's mainland over many centuries; the original Britons were eventually squeezed into the mountainous western region known as Cambria, or Wales.

The Saxon migration to Britain took place in the 5-6th centuries A.D.;¹⁶ the Danish invasions occurred in the 10th-11th centuries;¹⁷ and of course the Normans captured military and administrative control of the island in 1066.

pent = emended by Dyce from the quartos' spent.

remains = emended by Dyce from the quartos' Romans.

10 Yet have we hope to climb these stony pales,
When Londoners, as Romans erst, amazed,
Shall trembling cry, "Lluellen's at the gate!"

= mountainous borders (of Wales).

10-11: Lluellen hopes to lead a Welsh invasion right up to the gates of London.

as Romans erst = as the Romans had in an earlier time.

12 T' accomplish this, thus have I brought you forth Disguised to Milford-Haven: here attend
14 The landing of the Lady Elinor.

12-14: as the first step in his plan, Lluellen has led his followers to Milford-Haven (a port town located in what is now Wales' western-most county, Pembrokeshire), to await the arrival of his wife, the daughter of Simon de Montfort, Elinor, who had been living in exile in France. Simon, who had led the Barons' War against Henry III, had at the time found a powerful ally in the English-hating Lluellen. Engaged since 1267, Lluellen and Elinor had recently married by proxy, and Elinor has now sailed to rejoin her husband (Jones, p. 254).

attend = await.

= delay. = wonder, contemplate.

= ago. = ie. Elinor and her brother Almeric.

17-20: Lluellen prays to the Roman god of the sea for his wife's safe arrival.

18: keel = the lowest supporting piece of timber on a boat, hence meaning "boat"; a good example of a figure of speech known as a synecdoche, in which a term denoting a part represents the whole.¹

three-forked mace = Neptune's famous trident; a mace is a sceptre.¹

= marriage.

= ancient name for Wales.

= a common intensifier. = father.

= by.

27-29: the Welsh rebels hope that Elinor will act as a magnet for those English nobles who are still disaffected with the ruling Plantagenets, and might then join the Welsh cause, as so many had joined de Montfort's cause in the Barons' War.

great supply = ie. many men.

roads = inroads.³

16 Her stay doth make me muse: the wind stands fair,
And ten days hence we did expect them here. –
Neptune, be favourable to my love,

= delay. = wonder, contemplate.

18 And steer her keel with thy three-forkèd mace,
That from this shore I may behold her sails,
20 And in mine arms embrace my dearest dear.

= ago. = ie. Elinor and her brother Almeric.

22 Mered. Brave Prince of Wales, this honourable match
Cannot but turn to Cambria's common good.
24 Simon de Montfort, her thrice-valiant sire,
That in the barons' wars was general,
26 Was loved and honoured of the Englishmen:

17-20: Lluellen prays to the Roman god of the sea for his wife's safe arrival.

28 When they shall hear she's your espousèd wife,
Assure your grace we shall have great supply
To make our roads in England mightily.

27-29: the Welsh rebels hope that Elinor will act as a magnet for those English nobles who are still disaffected with the ruling Plantagenets, and might then join the Welsh cause, as so many had joined de Montfort's cause in the Barons' War.

	Owen. What we resolved must strongly be performed,
32	Before the king return from Palestine. Whilst he wins glory at Jerusalem, Let us win ground upon the Englishmen.	31: ie. "our plan must be implemented immediately and aggressively". 32: the Welsh have not heard yet of Edward's return.
34		= common formula for "I am afraid" or "I fear". = before.
36	Lluel. Owen ap Rice, 'tis that Lluellen fears: I fear me Edward will be come ashore Ere we can make provision for the war. But be it as it will, within his court My brother David is, that bears a face As if he were my greatest enemy. He by this craft shall creep into his heart,	40-44: Lluellen's brother Sir David resides at the English court where he pretends to be Lluellen's enemy, but actually acts as his brother's spy. creep into his heart = ie. earn Edward's trust.
44	And give intelligence from time to time Of his intentions, drifts, and stratagems.	= ie. of Edward's plans, etc.
46	Here let us rest upon the salt sea shore, And while our eyes long for our hearts' desires, Let us, like friends, pastime us on the sands. Our frolic minds are ominous for good.	David and his brother Llywelyn had been reconciled since the Barons' War had ended in 1267; but in 1274, the same year Edward returned from the continent, David turned against his brother for what was actually the third time, joining Edward in his court, and becoming a trusted attendant to the new king. Thus, during the period portrayed in this scene, David was not acting in any way as a spy in the English court for his brother. The final reconciliation, in which David, ungrateful for all the favours the king had granted him, did not occur until 1282, the year in which the power of Lluellen and his brother was crushed once and for all.
48		= ie. "my"; Lluellen employs the royal "we". = "pass the time in recreation", ie. "entertain ourselves". 48: basically, happy thoughts will presage good outcomes.
50	[Enter Friar Hugh ap David, Guenthian (his wench) in flannel , and Jack (his Novice).]	Entering Characters: a Welsh monk, Friar Hugh ap David , and his woman, named Guenthian , enter the stage. They are accompanied by the Friar's novice , or monk-in-training, Jack .
52	Friar. Guenthian, as I am true man. So will I do the best I can; Guenthian, as I am true priest, So will I be at thy behest; Guenthian, as I am true Friar, So will I be at thy desire.	Why does a friar have a woman? Our cleric will quickly reveal himself to be a man of highly questionable moral fibre; Peele characterizes this Catholic prelate as a figure of antic scorn for an audience living in officially Protestant Elizabethan England.
54		Much of the dialogue between these comic characters is written either in prose or in short rhyming couplets.
56		flannel = a woolen material that since at least the 15th century was manufactured in Wales, and thus associated with the Welsh by Elizabethan audiences. ²⁹
58		= ie. an honest or faithful man. ¹
60	Jack. My master stands too near the fire: Trust him not, wench; he will prove a liar.	= legitimate. ¹ = command. 57-58: among his many weakness, the Friar is a lecherous creature. = ie. is risking eternal damnation. ¹

62	Lluel. True man, true Friar, true priest, and true knave, These four in one this trull shall have.	63-64: the nobles are listening in and commenting on the conversation of the newly arrived characters. trull = girl, though often used for "whore". ¹
66	Friar. Here swear I by my shaven crown , Wench, if I give thee a gay green gown ,	= the well-known tonsure, or shaved circle of hair, on the top of a monk's head. = ie. "if I make love to you on the grass"; the expression green gown was used to indicate the staining of a dress resulting from a romantic romp on a lawn.
68	I'll take thee up as I laid thee down , And never bruise nor batter thee.	68: apparently a bawdy pun based on a Bible verse. I'll take thee up = the sense is likely, "I will take thee unto me", ie. "as my own"; this phrase appears in most early Bibles in Isaiah 54:7, and refers to God gathering or showing mercy on his people after he had abandoned them for a period. I laid thee down = very suggestive!
70	Jack. O, swear not , master; flesh is frail . –	71: swear not = ""make not such a vow". flesh is frail = common variation on "the flesh is weak", from Matthew 26:41 and Mark 14:38.
72	Wench, when the sign is in the tail , Mighty is love and will prevail:	72-73: "when the constellations are propitiously aligned, then love is in the air." The lines seem to represent a vague astrological reference: sign refers to one of the divisions of the Zodiac, and tail refers to the rear appendage of one of the animals of the Zodiac; but tail was also used to describe a woman's genitalia. ¹
74	This churchman doth but flatter thee.	74: ie. in order to seduce the lady.
76	Lluel. A pretty worm , and a lusty friar, Made for the field, not for the quire .	= ie. meaning Guenthian; loving worm was a collocation commonly used as a playful and affectionate name. = ie. the Friar really should have been a farmer or soldier rather than a cleric. the quire = the choir, ie. the church; quire is the older spelling for choir , the latter which does not come into regular use till the very late 17th century.
78	Guen. Mas Friar , as I am true maid ,	79: Mas Friar = abbreviation for Master Friar , a common vocative appellation. true maid = honest or genuine maiden or virgin.
80	So do I hold me well apaid :	80: "so I consider myself well contented (apaid)", ie. by the Friar's assurances.
82	'Tis churchman's lay and verity To live in love and charity;	= church law, faith. ¹ = truth or sincerity. ¹
84	And therefore ween I, as my creed, Your words shall company your deed.	83-84: "therefore I expect (ween), based on my beliefs, that you will actually do as you promise." company = alternate form of "accompany". ¹
86	Davy , my dear, I yield in all, Thine own to go and come at call.	= Guenthian addresses the Friar by his Christian name.
88	Mered. And so far forth begins our brawl .	86: "I am yours to command."
90	Friar. Then, my Guenthian, to begin,	= brawl could refer to quarreling or dancing; Bullen wonders if this line does not belong to Jack or Guenthian.

	Sith idleness in love is sin, –	91: The Friar perverts a common admonition of the era, which observed that idleness leads to thoughts of lust: he instead asserts that it is sinful to not act on love. Sith = since.
92	Boy, to the town I will thee hie ,	92-96: the Friar sends Jack to town to bring back food and drink. thee hie = ie. "hurriedly send you".
94	And so return even by and by , When thou with cakes and muscadine ,	= a monosyllable: e'en . = presently, right away.
96	And other junkets good and fine, Hast filled thy bottle and thy bag.	= a strong sweet wine. ² = sweets or delicacies. ^{1,2}
98	Jack. Now, master, as I am true wag ,	= honest fellow. ¹
100	I will be neither late nor lag, But go and come with gossip's cheer ,	= the food and drink of a friend. ¹
	Ere Gib our cat can lick her ear.	= before. = all cats in this era were referred to as Gib or Gyb .
102	For long ago I learned in school,	103-4: that amorous feelings subside quickly if not supplemented with bread and wine; cool is a verb.
104	That lovers' desires and pleasures cool Sans Ceres' wheat and Bacchus' vine :	Sans = adopted French word meaning "without". Ceres' = Ceres was the Roman goddess of agriculture generally and grains specifically.
106	Now, master, for the cakes and wine.	wheat = corrected by an early commentator from the quartos' sweetes . Bacchus' = Bacchus was the Roman god of wine.
	[Exit Jack.]
108	Friar. Wench, to pass away the time in glee,	= ie. sit.
110	Guenthian, set thee down by me.	111-2: ie. "let us sing."
112	And let our lips and voices meet In a merry country song.
114	Guen. Friar, I am at beck and bay ,	= a very rare alternative form of beck and call .
116	And at thy commandment to sing and say. And other sports among.	116: likely suggestive.
118	Owen. Ay, marry , my lord, this is somewhat like a	118: marry = an oath. somewhat...money = ie. "what every man prefers to buy" (Hook, p. 177).
120	man's money. Here's a wholesome Welsh wench, lapt in her flannel , as warm as wool and as fit as a pudding for a friar's mouth.	= dressed.
122	[The Friar and Guenthian sing.]
124	Luell. Pax vobis , pax vobis! good fellows, fair fall ye!	120: flannel = woolen material associated with the Welsh; interestingly, in Shakespeare's later The Merry Wives of Windsor , Falstaff refers to a Welsh woman as "the Welsh flannel". as fit...mouth = this line became proverbial.
126		123: the song has been lost.
128	Friar. Et cum spiritu tuo! Friends, have you anything else to say to the Friar?	125ff: Lluellen and his companions finally make their presence known to the Friar's party. Pax vobis = "peace with you".
130		= "and with thy spirit!" In the early part of this conversation, the Friar appears impatient for his guests to leave as soon as possible.

	Owen. Much good do you, much good [do] you, my masters, heartily.
132
134	Friar. And you, sir, when ye eat. Have ye anything else to say to the Friar?
136
138	Lluel. Nothing; but I would gladly know, if mutton be your first dish, what shall be your last service?	= common word used to mean "women's flesh" or "whore"; Lluellen's pun is obvious.
140		= meaning both (1) course of food, and (2) religious service.
142	Friar. It may be, sir, I count it physic to feed but on one dish at a sitting. Sir, would you anything else with the Friar?	= "account it to be medicinal". = "is there anything else you want".
144	Mered. O, nothing, sir: but if you had any manners, you might bid us fall to.	= ie. "invite us to join you in your meal."
146
148	Friar. Nay, an that be the matter, good enough. Is this all ye have to say to the Friar?	= if; throughout the play, an (and sometimes an if) is used to mean "if".
150	Lluel. All we have to say to you, sir: it may be, sir, we would walk aside with your wench a little.
152
154	Friar. My masters and friends, I am a poor friar, a man of God's making, and a good fellow as you are, legs, feet, face, and hands, and heart, from top to toe, of my word, right shape and Christendom; and I love a wench as a wench should be loved; and if you love yourselves, walk, good friends, I pray you, and let the Friar alone with his flesh.
156
158
160	Lluel. O Friar, your holy mother, the Church, teaches you to abstain from these morsels. – Therefore,
162
164	my masters, 'tis a deed of charity to remove this stumbling-block, a fair wench, a shrewd temptation to a friar's conscience.
166
168	Guen. Friend, if you knew the Friar half so well as the Bailey of Brecknock, you would think you might as
170	soon move Mannock-deny into the sea as Guenth[ian] from his side.
172	Lluel. Mass, by your leave, we'll prove.
		= a mountain with an uncertain location. Sugden and others identify Mannock-deny with the peak known as Cadir Idris, which is located in north-west Wales in the county of Gwynedd; Bullen places it in Brecknockshire in south-east Wales.
		The quartos print Monk Davy here, but the editors agree that the mountain, which shall be referred to again later on, was intended.
		172: Mass = a common oath. by your leave = with your permission. we'll prove = "we will show you we can do so."

174	Guen. At your peril, if you move his patience .	= "try his (the Friar's) patience."
176	Friar. Brother, brother, and my good countrymen, –	176: the Friar urges peace as the tension begins to rise.
178	Lluel. Countrymen! nay, I cannot think that an English friar will come so far into Wales barefooted.	178-9: Lluellen pretends to assume the Friar is English, and thus not entitled to call him his countryman .
180
182	Owen. That's more than you know; and yet, my lord, he might ride , having a filly so near.	181-2: Owen puns, offering that the Friar might have come to Wales on horseback, referring to Guenthian as the Friar's filly . The joke is compounded by the fact that ride could also be used to refer to sexually mounting. ¹
184	Friar. Hands off, good countrymen, at few words and fair warnings.	184-5: the nobles have taken hold of Guenthian.
186
188	Lluel. Countrymen! not so, sir; we renounce thee, Friar, and refuse your country .	= refuse to recognize, repudiate. ¹ = spurn, reject. ¹ = ie. England.
190	Friar. Then, brother, and my good friends, hands off, an if you love your ease.
192
194	Mered. Ease me no easings: we'll ease you of this carriage .	191: "if you value your comfort," ¹ (threatening words).
196	Friar. Fellow, be gone quickly, or my pike-staff and I will set thee away with a vengeance.
198
200	Lluel. I am sorry, trust me, to see the Church so unpatient.	196-7: the Friar threatens to do violence to his guests with his pike-staff , a walking stick with a metal point at its lower end. ¹
202	Friar. Ye dogs, ouns! do me a shrewd turn and mock
204	me too? flesh and blood will not bear this. – Then rise up, Robert , and say to Richard , Redde rationem	202: ouns! = an oath, an apheaeeresis (omission of the opening sound of a word) of Wounds! , which refers to God's wounds , a common old oath; but Hook proposes that the clause should be spelled and punctuated as " Yea, dog's ouns! ", explaining that dog was sometimes used to mean God (the consonants reversed), and thus the clause is meant to represent a modified version of the oath God's wounds . shrewd turn = evil or bad deed.
	villicationis tuae. – Sir countryman, kinsman,
206	Englishman, Welshman, you with the wench, return your habeas corpus ; here's a certiorari for your procedendo .	204: Robert = an unclear reference, uncommented on by any of the editors. Perhaps this should read Davy , as the Friar seems to be talking to himself. Richard = the Friar's nickname for his pike-staff. ²⁸
208		204-5: Redde...tuae = "give an account of your stewardship"; from Luke 16:2 of the Vulgate , or Latin, Bible.
		205-8: the Friar returns to addressing Lluellen, who now has taken full possession of Guenthian; note that the Friar is not at all sure what nationality Lluellen is, though you would think his regional accent might give him away.
		207-8: the Friar employs legal terminology to reinforce his threats. The Friar's familiarity with such lingo supports Guenthian's indication above at lines 167-8 that he has had frequent experience with the criminal justice system.
		habeas corpus = "produce the body"; a writ instructing an official to deliver a person held in detention unlawfully. ¹
		certiori = a writ from an appeals court instructing the inferior court to provide the records of a trial in which a party claims he or she has not received justice. ¹

210	[Attacks them with his staff.]	210: stage direction added by the editors.
212	Owen. Hold , Friar! we are thy countrymen.	212ff: the Welsh nobles back off, realizing that their joke has gone far enough. Hold = stop.
214	Mered. Paid , paid! Digon! we are thy countrymen, Mundue!	= content! = Welsh for "enough!" ²⁴ = twisted French for "my God" - Mon Dieu ; perhaps a mock-Welsh pronunciation.
216		217-9: now the Friar rejects the idea that he and his guests are co-nationals.
218	Friar. My countrymen! nay, marry, sir, shall you not be my countrymen; you, sir, you , specially you, sir, that refuse the Friar and renounce his country.	= ie. Lluellen.
220
222	Lluel. Friar, hold thy hands. I swear as I am a gentleman, I am a Welshman, and so are the rest,	221-2: as I am a gentleman = Bullen notes that Welshmen were stereotyped as "taking particular pride in their gentility" (p. 104).
	of honesty.	= of high rank. ^{1,7}
224
226	Friar. Of honesty, sayest thou? they are neither gentlemen nor Welshmen that will deny their country.	= another round of fighting.
228	– Come hither, wench; I'll have a bout with them once more for denying of their country.
230	[Makes as if he would fight.]	230: the Friar threatens to renew his attack.
232	Mered. Friar, thou wottest not what thou sayest: this is the prince, and we are all his train , disposed	= "you don't know"; wottest = knowest.
234	to be pleasant with thee a little; but I perceive, Friar, thy nose will bide no jest.	= attendants. = "to tease" or "to joke around with".
236		235: occasionally-used expression meaning "you cannot take a joke".
238	Friar. As much as you will with me, sir, but not at any hand with my wench: I and Richard my man here,	237-8: As much...my wench = "you may joke around with me as much as you wish, but not on any account (not at any hand) ¹ with my woman."
	are here contra omnes gentes – but is this Lluellen,	= another legal expression, meaning "against all people", used in covenants of warranty. ¹⁸
240	the great Camber-Briton ?
242	Lluel. It is he, Friar: give me thy hand, and	= ie. Welsh-Briton; the Friar alludes to the Welsh tradition that they were the original Britons; see the Note above at lines 4-5 of this scene.
244	gramceries twenty times. I promise thee thou hast cudgelled two as good lessons into my jacket as ever churchman did at so short warning: the one is, not to	= "thank you", from the French grant merci . ¹
246	be too busy with another man's cattle ; the other, not in haste to deny my country.	= beaten. = ie. the first lesson.
248		246: be too busy with = slang meaning "to have sex with". ¹ cattle = chattel, ie. property; Lluellen is not calling Guenthian a cow, though his referring to her as property is not much more satisfying or generous; Hook notes a later dictionary's entry for cattle as a cant term for whore.

	Friar. 'Tis pity, my lord, but you should have more of this learning, you profit so well by it.
250
252	Lluel. 'Tis pity, Friar, but thou shouldst be Lluellen's chaplain, thou edifiest so well; and so shalt thou be,
254	of mine honour: here I entertain thee, thy boy, and thy
	trull, to follow my fortune in secula seculorum.
256
	Friar. And Richard my man, sir, and you love me, –
258	he that stands by me and shrunk not at all weathers;
	and then you have me in my colours.
260
262	Lluel. Friar, agreed. – Rice, welcome the ruffians.
264	[Enter the Harper and Jack, Harper singing to the tune of "Who List to Lead a Soldier's Life."]
266
268	Harp. Go to, go to, you Britons all, And play the men, both great and small: A wondrous matter hath befall, That makes the prophet cry and call, Tum date dite dum, That you must march, both all and some, Against your foes with trump and drum:
270
272
274	I speak to you from God, that you shall overcome.
276	[With a turn both ways.]
278	Lluel. What now? Who have we here? "Tum date dite dum"!
280
282	Friar. What, have we a fellow dropt out of the element? What's he for a man?
284	Mered. Knowest thou this goosecap?
286	Friar. What, not Morgan Pigot, our good Welsh prophet? O, 'tis a holy harper!
288
290	Mered. A prophet, with a murrain! Good my lord, let's hear a few of his lines, I pray you.
	= instructs. 254: of = by. entertain = employ, hire. thy boy = Jack, the Friar's novice.
	255: trull = girl. in secula seculorum = forever and ever,¹⁹ the expression appears multiple times in the Latin Vulgate Bible.
	257: ie. "and you will employ my servant Richard too, if you really love me;" Richard, we remember, is the Friar's pet name for his pike-staff.
	= "does not retreat from fear during bad weather", ie. in a fight. = "in my true colours", ie. "as I am".¹
	Entering Characters: Jack has found a musician, a harp-player, to bring back to entertain his master. = a well-known song of the era; apparently the original lyrics have been lost, though the melody is known through published parodies.²⁰
	= go on.
	269-270: the Harper, who fancies himself a prophet, suggests he has an oracle to speak. 271: musical syllables.
	= trumpets and drums, the instruments of martial music; the Harper is predicting that his audience of Welshmen will march against the English. = prevail, ie. defeat the English.
	276: the Harper, dancing, rotates in both directions.
	278-9: Lluellen may be either irritated or amused by the Harper.
	= ie. "who dropped". = sky or heavens.² = "what sort of man is he?"⁴
	= fool.
	286-7: the Harper is apparently a locally well-known personage, though a fictional character. = because of his alleged gift of prophecy.
	= "with a plague", an imprecation of astonishment. = please.

292	Jack. My lords, 'tis an odd fellow, I can tell you, as	= remarkable. ¹
294	any is in all Wales. He can sing, rhyme with reason, and rhyme without reason, and without reason or rhyme.	293-5: rhyme...rhyme = while the expression without rhyme or reason dates back to at least 1531, ¹ this seems to be a variation on the first line of the introduction of John Heywood's 1550 An Hundred Epigrammes : "Rhyme without reason, and reason without rhyme".
296	Lluel. The devil , he can! Rhyme with reason, and	= throughout the play, instead of devil , the quartos employ the alternate spelling divel .
298	rhyme without reason, and reason without rhyme!	299-301: an ale-tapping metaphor for "give us an example of your prophesizing."
300	Then, good Morgan Pigot, pluck out thy spigot , and draw us a fresh pot from the kinder-kind of thy knowledge.	pluck out thy spigot = pull out the plug or faucet from a barrel (so as to allow the ale to flow freely). ¹ pot = deep vessel for holding ale. kinderkind = old form of kilderkin , a cask which by statute held 18 gallons of beer and 16 of ale. ¹
302	Friar. Knowledge, my son, knowledge, I warrant ye.	= assure.
304	— How sayest thou, Morgan, art thou not a very prophet?
306	Harp. Friar, Friar, a prophet verily ,
308	For great Lluellen's love,	= truly.
310	Sent from above To bring him victory.	308: the Harper refers to Elinor.
312	Mered. Come, then, gentle prophet, let's see how thou canst salute thy prince. Say , shall we have good success in our enterprise or no?	313: Say = "tell us".
314		313-4: have good...enterprise = ie. "succeed in our rebellion".
316	Harp. When the weathercock of Carnarvon steeple	316: weathercock = weathervane commonly made in the shape of a cock.
318	shall engender young ones in the belfry, and a herd of goats leave their pasture to be clothed in silver,	Carnarvon = the anglicized name of Caernarfon, a town on the north-west coast of Wales, in the county of Gwynedd, Lluellen's power base.
320	Then shall Brute be born anew, And Wales record their ancient hue .	= give birth to, beget.
	Ask Friar David if this be not true.	319: ie. then shall a new king for Wales be born.
322	Friar. This my lord, ' a means by you.	320: "and the Welsh recall (record) their ancient colour (hue)," ie. and the Welsh regain their independence, as they had in the old days.
324	O, he is a prophet, a prophet.	316-320: the Harper's mysterious prediction calls to mind the notoriously confusing and ambiguous pronouncements of the oracles of the ancient world.
326	Lluel. Soft you now, good Morgan Pigot, and take us	= ie. "by this". = he.
328	with ye a little, I pray. What means your wisdom by all this?	326: soft you now = "hold on".
		take us with ye = "let us understand you", ie. "explain what you mean", a common expression.
		= a lightly mocking title.
		326-8: despite himself, Lluellen begins to take an interest in 330 Harp. The weathercock, my lord, was your father, 332 who by foul weather of war was driven to take sanctuary in Saint Mary's at Carnarvon, where he begat young ones on your mother in the belfry, viz.

the Harper's predictions.

334 your worship and your brother David.

336 Lluel. But what didst thou mean by the goats?

338 Harp. The goats that leave the pasture to be clothed in silver, are the silver goats your men wear on their 340 sleeves.

342 Friar. O, how I love thee, Morgan Pigot, our sweet prophet!

344 Lluel. Hence, rogue, with your prophecies, out of my 346 sight!

348 Mered. Nay, good my lord, let's have a few more of these metres: he hath great store in his head.

350 Jack. Yea, and of the best in the market, and your 352 lordship would vouchsafe to hear them.

354 Lluel. Villain, away! I'll hear no more of your prophecies.

356 Harp. When legs shall lose their length,
358 And shanks yield up their strength,
Returning weary home from out the holy land,
360 A Welshman shall be king
And govern merry England.

362 Mered. Did I not tell your lordship he would hit it 364 home anon?

366 Friar. My lord, he comes to your time, that's flat.

368 Jack. Ay, master, and you mark him, he hit the mark 370 pat.

372 Friar. As how, Jack?

374 Jack. Why, thus:
When legs shall lose their length.
And shanks yield up their strength,
376 Returning weary home from out the holy land,

333: young ones = Lluellen's father had four sons, including our play's Lluellen and David, a third son Owain (not our play's Owen ap Rice), and a fourth name Rhodri.
viz. = "to wit", an abbreviation of videlicet.

330-334: Lluellen's father was Gruffydd ap Llywelyn (c.
1196 - March 1244), who seems to have fought against his own father (and was even imprisoned by his father at one point for six years) more than he fought against the English.⁹

339-340: the silver...sleeves = apparently the emblems of goats Lluellen's men wear as insignia. Hook notes that the English have a humorous stereotype of the Welsh as raisers of goats.

= ie. "get out of here".

= verses.¹ = supply.

= if.

= deign.

= obvious reference to Edward.

363-4: hit it home = cut to the essence, arrive at the truth.
= quickly.

366: the sense is, "he is speaking about you, that is certain."

= listen closely to. = "nailed it", a metaphor from archery; note the intra-line wordplay with mark, a Peele trademark.
= exactly.¹

	A Welshman shall be king And govern merry England. Why, my lord, in this prophecy is your advancement	= promotion, rise to the top.
378		380-1: the Friar and Lluellen are left to figure out what Jack means. At first glance, Jack's simile suggests the Harper's meaning is only sort-of clear.
380	as plainly seen as a three half-pence through a dish of butter in a sunny day.	This seems to be a variation of a common simile which describes the rapid dissipation of money or assets as "melting like butter in the sun".
382		383-4: the Friar tries to interpret Jack's simile.
384	Friar. I think so, Jack; for he that sees three half-pence must tarry till the butter be melted in the sun: and so, forth, apply, boy.	= wait.
386		385: the Friar asks Jack, since he thinks the Harper's meaning is so clear, to go ahead and explain it.
388	Jack. Non ego master: do you, an you dare.	= "not I". = if.
390	Lluel. And so, boy, thou meanest, he that tarries this prophecy may see Longshanks shorter by the head and Lluellen wear the crown in the field?	= ie. "waits for the fulfillment of the". = ie. Edward's head cut off.
392		391: Lluellen will win the crown of England in battle by defeating the English king.
394	Friar. By Lady , my lord, you go near the matter . – But what saith Morgan Pigot more?	393: By Lady = an oath, referring to the Virgin Mary, usually appearing as by our Lady . go near the matter = are getting closer to the point.
396	Harp. In the year of our Lord God 1272, shall spring from the loins of Brute , one whose wife's name being	397: from the loins of Brute = ie. a descendant of Brute. 397-8: one whose...his own = explained below.
398	the perfect end of his own , shall consummate the	398: own = Dyce's emendation from the quartos' ground . consummate = bring about.
400	peace betwixt England and Wales, and be advanced to ride through Cheapside with a crown on his head; and	399: betwixt = between. 399-400: be advanced...his head = another prediction, this time more explicit, seemingly suggesting that this Welsh prince shall become King of England.
402	that's meant by your lordship , for your wife's name being Ellen, and your own Lluellen, beareth the perfect end of your own name: so must it needs be	Cheapside = a district of London immediately to the east of St. Paul's Cathedral. Cheapside Street itself was from the Middle Ages an important route for royal and civic processions. ²¹
404	that, [though] for a time Ellen flee from Lluellen, ye	401: and that's...lordship = the Harper finally says straight out that he is talking about Lluellen.
406	being betrothed in heart each to others, must needs be advanced to be highest of your kin.	401-3: your wife's...own name = Lluellen's name ends with "ellen", his wife's name.
408	Lluel. Jack, I make him thy prisoner . Look, what way my fortune inclines, that way goes he.	= ie. will be separated.
		405-6: must needs...kin = ie. Lluellen will reach the highest position of anyone in his family ever has, which the others interpret to mean he will become King of England.
		408: Jack...prisoner = simply meaning that Jack will be responsible for taking care of the Harper.
		408-9: what way...goes he = a double-edged sword: if Lluellen's fortune rises, the Harper will be promoted

410

Mered. Sirrah, see you run swiftest.

412

Friar. Farewell: be far from the spigot.

414

[Exeunt Friar and Guenthian.]

416

Jack. Now, sir, if our country ale were as good as 418 your metheglin, I would teach you to play the knave, or you should teach me to play the harper.

420

422

Harp. Ambo, boy; you are too light-witted as I am 424 light-minded.

426

Jack. It seems to me thou art fittest and passing well.

428

[Exeunt Jack and Harper.]

430

Enter Guenther with letters.

432

Lluel. What tidings bringeth Guenther with his haste?
Say, man, what bodes thy message, good or bad?

434

Guenther. Bad, my lord; and all in vain, I wot,
Thou dart'st thine eyes upon the wallowing main,

As erst did Aegeus to behold his son,

436

To welcome and receive thy welcome love;
And sable sails he saw, and so mayst thou,
For whose mishap the brackish seas lament,
Edward, O Edward!

440

Lluel. And what of him?

442

Guenther. Landed he is at Dover with his men,
From Palestine safe; by his English lords,
Received in triumphs like an earthly god:

446

He lives to wear his father's diadem, accordingly - but if his predictions turn out to be false, then the Harper can expect to suffer as well.

411: Meredith addresses the Friar. Sirrah was a common term of address to a social inferior.

417-9: Jack addresses the Harper.

418: a "strong spiced Welsh mead" (Crystal, p. 281), mead being a sweet alcohol made by fermenting honey-water.¹ play the knave = ie. "how to act like a rascal".
= ie. "act like a harp-player".

= Latin for "both". = of weak intellect.

= of frivolous character or mind.¹

= most well-suited.¹ = exceedingly.

Entering Character: Guenther appears to be messenger or supporter of Lluellen. He of course is not to be confused with the Friar's wench, with her similar-sounding Welsh name Guenthian.

= news.

431: ie. "tell me, is it good news or bad news?"

433-4: all in vain...main = "it is in vain that you scan the sea (looking for the ship that brings your Elinor)".

wot = know.

wallowing main = rolling or heaving seas.¹

435: Aegeus, founder and king of Athens, awaited the return of his son Theseus from Crete, where the latter had gone to slay the Minotaur. Theseus had promised to raise white sails to let his father know if he had succeeded in his mission, and black if he failed. Sailing with black sails, Theseus forgot to change his sails to white, and Aegeus, thinking that Theseus had been slain by the Minotaur, threw himself into the sea and drowned.²²

= black. = ie. Aegeus.

= bad luck or unfortunate event or accident.¹

= ie. Edward.

= celebrations.^{1,7} = a god on the earth.

446: ie. since Edward is alive and safely back in England, he can expect now to be crowned king; Lluellen, we remember, had hoped to get his rebellion going before Edward returned (see lines 37-38 above).

448	And sway the sword of British Albion. But Elinor, thy Elinor!	447: briefly, "and rule England."
450	Lluel. And what of her?	451-2: Lluellen wonders if Neptune, the Roman god of the sea, having fallen in love with Elinor as she sailed from France, has taken her for himself, presumably an elaborate metaphor for her drowning.
452	Hath amorous Neptune gazed upon my love, And stopt her passage with his forkèd mace ?	his forked mace = ie. Neptune's famous trident.
454	Or, that I rather fear, – O deadly fear! – Enamoured Nereus doth he withhold My Elinor?	= oft-referred to sea-god.
456
458	Guenther. Nor Neptune, Nereus, nor other god Withholdeth from my gracious lord his love:
460	But cruél Edward, that injurious king, Withholds thy liefest lovely Elinor;	= harm-inflicting. ¹
462	Taken in a pinnace on the narrow seas By four tall ships of Bristow , and with her Lord Almeric , her unhappy noble brother,	= dearest. ²
464	As from Montargis hitherward they sailed.	= captured. = small sailing boat. ¹ = the English Channel.
466	This say in brief these letters tell at large .	= Bristol.
		= the quartos print Emerick . = unlucky.
468		464: Montargis = ancient city 60 miles south of Paris; ⁶ Elinor presumably sailed from Montargis on the Loing River into the Seine, and hence into the English Channel. One chronicle mentions that it was here where Elinor and her family lived in exile after the Barons' War. ⁷
470		hitherward = towards here.
472	[Lluellen reads his brother Sir David's letters.]	= ie. "this brief account of mine". ³ = at length, in detail.
		Elinor's Capture: Edward, aware of Elinor's voyage to Wales, had her ship captured in the Bristol Channel, and imprisoned her at Windsor Castle.
		Edward, we remember, had returned to England in August 1274; the capture of Elinor took place in late 1275.⁵ Such condensing of events which took place over widely separated dates into a single scene or adjacent scenes was a hallmark of Elizabethan history plays.
473	Lluel. Is Longshanks, then, so lusty now become? Is my fair love, my beauteous Elinor, ta'en? Villains, damned villains, not to guard her safe, Or fence her sacred person from her foes! –	467: Lluellen's brother and spy, Sir David, has managed to smuggle some letters out to his brother.
		= active, vigorous.
		471-2: Lluellen refers to those responsible for safely delivering Elinor to him in Wales.
		fence = defend.
		473: Sun = the sun god Apollo.
		couldst thou shine = ie. "is it possible that you could remain shining".
		beset = assaulted.
		473-7: though it was as a god that Apollo had slain Python (see the Note immediately below at line 477), in these lines Lluellen poetically imagines Apollo using the attributes of the sun to kill the beast.

474	And didst not clothe thy clouds in fiery coats, O'er all the heavens, with wingèd sulphur flames, As when thy beams, like mounted combatants , Battled with Python in the fallowed lays?	= ie. knights on horseback. = uncultivated leas, ie. pastures or meadows. ^{1,3}
478	But if kind Cambria deign me good aspéct , To make me chiefest Brute of western Wales,	473-7: Apollo's mother was Leto, who had been seduced by Jupiter. While Leto was still pregnant, Juno, the jealous wife of the king of the gods, ordered the dragon known as Python to chase Leto so that she did not give birth anywhere the sun shown. Apollo later took revenge on the Python by hunting it down and slaying it at Delphi. ²³
480	I'll short that gain-legged Longshank[s] by the top, And make his flesh my murthering falchion's food. –	478: "if Wales grants me good fortune"; aspéct refers to the position of the stars as they relate to a horoscope. = Welshman. ¹
482	To arms, true Britons, sprong of Trojans' seed, And with your swords write in the Book of Time	480: ie. "I'll cut the head off that Edward". short = shorten. gain-legged = perhaps meaning nimble- or active-legged; but Dodsley ²⁸ suggests (though unmetrically) that ungain-legged makes more sense, as ungain means awkward or troublesome. ¹
484	Your British names in characters of blood! –	481: murthering = common alternate form of "murdering". falchion's = a falchion was a curved broad-sword. ² = sprung from, ie. descended from. = metaphorical chronicle of great events of all history.
486	Owen ap Rice, while we stay for further force , Prepare, away in post , and take with thee A hundred chosen of thy countrymen,	484: British = the Welsh consider themselves the true British, or Britons, in contrast to the mongrel English, whose blood is a mix of Angle, Saxon, Jute and Norman. characters = letters.
488	And scour the marches with your Welshmen's hooks ,	= await reinforcements. = hurry.
490	That Englishmen may think the devil is come. Rice shall remain with me: make thou thy bode	488: scour = the sense seems to be "ravage". marches = borderlands of Wales and England.
492	In resolution to revenge these wrongs With blood of thousands guiltless of this rage .	Welshmen's hooks = pole-weapons favoured by the Welsh, each having a hook attached to its metal head (Lublin, p. 115). ²⁵
494	Fly thou on them amain – Edward, my love Be thy life's bane ! – Follow me, countrymen!	= ie. Meredith. = "make good use of your tarrying". ¹
	Words make no way: my Elinor is surprised;	= thousands of innocent persons. = ie. outrage. ⁷
496	Robbed am I of the comfort of my life: And know I this, and am not venged on him ?	= with all speed. = ie. "may Elinor". = ruin.
498	[Exit Lluellen and the other Lords.]	495: Words...way = words alone (ie. without action) accomplish nothing. is surprised = was captured unexpectedly.
500	[Re-enter Friar and Jack his Novice,	= the sense is, "and am I expected to do nothing about it?" venged = avenged.
		499-514: Dyce would end the scene at line 499, with Lluellen's dramatic closing flourish, but the quartos add this small and definitely anti-climactic coda.

Actually, the quartos' stage direction says that the Friar and his crew remain on stage when the lords leave, but they had exited at lines 415 and 426 above!

Friar. Come, boy, we must buckle I see, the prince is of my profession right: rather than he will lose his profession = religious order, or vow made upon entering such an order, applied metaphorically to Lluellen.

504: buckle = prepare for battle.²

504-5: the prince...right = ie. "Lluellen has the same philosophy as have I."

wench, he will fight Ab ouo usque ad mala.

= literally, "from eggs to apples", meaning "from beginning to end"; the sense then is that Lluellen can be expected to see this all the way through.

Jack. O master, doubt you not, but your Novice will prove a hot shot, with a bottle of Metheglin.

= one ready to shoot with a firearm, hence an enthusiastic and excitable person.¹

[Exeunt, here the wench falls into a Welsh song, and the Friar answers, and Jack between.] 511-2: Guenthian and the Friar sing the verses, and Jack the chorus in between.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE III.

Berwick Castle, Berwick, on the border of England and Scotland, with transfer to a Street in London at line 134.

The Setting: the walled town of Berwick lies at the mouth of the River Tweed, on the border of Scotland and England.

Backstory: when the Scottish king Alexander III unexpectedly died in 1286 - he had accidentally ridden his horse off a cliff at Fife - he had left no clear immediate heir; his wife was pregnant at the time, but the child was stillborn. A council of guardians was formed to rule Scotland until it could be determined who should take possession of the throne.

It wasn't until 1290 that the council settled on Alexander's granddaughter Margaret, who was but six-years-old (Margaret's mother, also named Margaret - Alexander's daughter - had died at the age of 21 giving birth to Margaret; she had been married to King Eric II of Norway). Tragically, young Margaret mysteriously died on the Orkney Islands as she was being transported back to Scotland to formally take the throne (interestingly, it had also been planned that she should marry King Edward's eldest surviving son, also named Edward - the future Edward II - thus joining the royal lines of England, Scotland and Norway).

With the Scottish royal family suddenly extinct after three centuries, civil war loomed as various Scottish magnates quietly began to prepare to attempt to seize the throne. Alarmed at the prospect of bloodshed, the Bishop of St. Andrews wrote to Edward, asking him to act as a referee and select the next king. King Edward accepted the assignment (Jones, pp. 275-6).

A formal commission containing both English and

*Enter the Nine Lords of Scotland, (including John Baliol), with their Pages,
Glocester, Sussex, King Edward in his suit of glass, Queen Elinor, the Queen-Mother, [and Joan]:
the King and Queen under a canopy.*

- 1 K. Edw. Nobles of Scotland, we thank you all
- 2 For this day's gentle princely service done
To Edward, England's king and Scotland's lord.
- 4 Our coronation's due solemnity
Is ended with applause of all estates:
- 6 Now, then, let us repose and rest us here.
But specially we thank you, gentle lords,

Scottish judges was formed. On 14 October 1292 the commission met at Berwick, where 13 petitioners put forth their claims to the throne; of these, three were given strong consideration: (1) John Baliol, (2) Robert Bruce, Earl of Annandale, and (3) John Hastings; the claims of all three were based on their descent from King David I (ruled 1124-1153).⁹

It is now 17 November 1292; the big day has arrived, and Edward is about to announce the commission's decision: the next King of Scotland is about to be proclaimed.

Entering Characters: John Baliol, the Lord of Bernard Castle, and the other leading candidates for the Scottish throne have been waiting a long time for this day, as King Edward is expected to announce who will be the new King of Scotland.

suit of glass = a robe adorned with numerous small, reflective diamond-shaped panes of glass, called quarries or quarrels.¹

= possibly trisyllabic³ - SCOT-e-land - though so much of the play's verse is corrupted and unmetrical that it probably does not matter.

= honourable attending of the king.²

3: Edward will continuously remind the Scots that he considers himself their nation's feudal overlord.

The issue of Scottish fealty was always a difficult one; the English monarchs assumed that the Scottish nobility held their lands in a feudal relationship under the English monarch, just as all the English property-owners did. Complicating the matter was the fact that the most powerful nobles of both regions held land in both Scotland and England; so Scottish lords had to be careful to satisfy the demands for fealty from the English kings to ensure they did not have their valuable wealth-producing fiefs in England stripped away.

As a factual matter, in June 1292 (5 months before the present day), most of the claimants to the Scottish throne, including John Baliol and Robert Bruce, took an oath of fealty to Edward.

4-5: Edward and Elinor have finally been crowned king and queen of England.
estates = classes or ranks.¹

Peele describes the English king and queen's crowning ceremony as taking place almost at the same time as his deciding of the "Great Cause" of Scotland. However, the couple's crowning ceremony actually had taken place almost two decades earlier - in 1274. In fact, by the time the Scottish succession crisis was being settled - 1292 - Edward was a widower, Elinor having died in 1290.

= a common adjective used to signal affection or kindly intent.

8 That you so well have governèd your griefs,
 10 As, being grown unto a general jar,
 You choose King Edward by your messengers,
 To calm, to qualify, and to compound
 12 Th' enkindled strife of Scotland's climbing peers.

 14 I have no doubt, fair lords, but you well wot
 How factions waste the richest commonwealth,
 And discord spoils the seats of mighty kings.
 16 The barons' war, a tragic wicked war,
 Nobles, how hath it shaken England's strength!
 18 Industriously, it seems to me, you have Loyally ventured to prevent this shock;

 20 For which, sith you have chosen me your judge,
 My lords, will you stand to what I shall award?

 24 Bali. Victorious Edward, to whom the Scottish kings Owe homage as their lord and sovereign,
 Amongst us nine is but one lawful king:

 26 But might we all be judges in the case,
 Then should in Scotland be nine kings at once,
 28 And this contention never set or limited.

 30 To stay these jars we jointly make appeal
 To thy imperial throne, who knows our claims.
 32 We stand not on our titles before your grace,
 But do submit ourselves to your award;
 34 And whom your majesty shall name to be our king,
 To him we'll yield obedience as a king.
 36 Thus willingly, and of their own accord,
 Doth Scotland make great England's king her judge.

 38 K. Edw. Then, nobles, since you all agree in one,
 That for a crown so disagree in all,
 40 Since what I do shall rest inrevocable,
 Hold up your hands in sight, with general voice,
 42 That are content to stand to our award.

 44 Omnes. [All holding up their hands] He shall.

 46 K. Edw. Deliver me the golden diadem. —
 Lo, here I hold the goal for which ye strived,
 48 And here behold, my worthy men-at-arms,
 For chivalry and worthy wisdom's praise,
 50 Worthy each one to wear a diadem:

8-20: Edward acknowledges the wisdom the Scottish have shown to submit their cause to his judgment, thus avoiding civil war.
 = quarrel.

 = settle.²

 12: Th' enkindled strife = the quarto reads, nonsensically, Thanke Britains strife, emended by Bullen; another common emendation is Th' ambitious strife.³ climbing = ie. rising in rank or social status.¹

 = know.

 16-17: see Prelude II of the Introduction to the play.

 = diligently.¹
 19: ie. "decided to take your chances (by letting me settle the issue) and thus avoided civil war."

 = since.
 21: Edward asks the lords to affirm ahead of his announced decision that they will peaceably accept his choice of king.

 25: there were actually at least thirteen announced candidates for the Scottish throne.

 = ie. "there should", or "we would choose that".
 28: contention = quarrel.
set or limited = ie. settled by the selection of a single one of them to be the ruler.
= prevent this strife.

 31: "we do not make our individual claims to the throne based on our ranks or titles".

 = probably should read her.⁴

 = ie. decide. = be unappealable.
 41-42: Edward asks the nobles to formally vow to accept his choice in the Great Cause.

 = ie. "he shall select the king".^{3,4}

 = give.
 = behold.
= ie. referring to the Scots.

= ie. "each one of you is worthy".

	Expect my doom , as erst at Ida hills	51: doom = judgment, decision. as erst = "just as once upon a time". 51-53: at Ida hills...Dardan's son = allusion to the so-called Judgment of Paris , a mythological beauty contest held between the three goddesses Juno, Venus and Athena. The umpire was Paris, a prince of the royal Trojan family. Dardan's son = descendant of Dardanus, ie. Paris; Dardanus was the legendary founder of Troy. ³ George Peele's earliest play, The Arraignment of Paris , was about the Judgment of Paris.
52	The goddesses divine waited the award	= this may be condensed to th' award for the sake of the meter.
54	Of Dardan's son. Baliol, stand farthest forth : Baliol, behold, I give thee the Scottish crown: Wear it with heart and with thankfulness.	= "step forward."
56	Sound trumpets, and say all after me, God save King Baliol, the Scottish king!	= courage. ¹
58
60	[The trumpets sounds; all cry aloud, "God save King Baliol, the Scottish King."]
62	Thus, lords, though you require no reason why, According to the conscience in the cause, I make John Baliol your anointed king. Honour and love him, as behoves him best That is in peace of Scotland's crown possessed.
64
66
68	Bali. Thanks, royal England , for thy honour done. This justice that hath calmed our civil strife, Shall now be ceased with honourable love. So movèd of remorse and pity ,	= ie. Edward.
70		= possible error, ³ or referring to the strife .
72	We will erect a college of my name;	71: moved of = "moved [am I] by".
74	In Oxford will I build, for memory Of Baliol's bounty and his gratitude;	pity = probably should be emended to piety , both for the sake of the meaning and the meter. ³
76	And let me happy days no longer see Than here to England loyal I shall be.	= "I"; Baliol immediately adopts the royal "we".
		73-74: a historical error: it was Baliol's father, John de Balliol, who founded Balliol College at Oxford University - and it was an involuntary act. A violent quarrel between the elder Balliol and the Bishop of Durham had erupted in 1260; condemned by Henry III, Balliol suffered a public whipping, and the Bishop imposed penance on Balliol, requiring him to perform a significant act of charity. It was at this time that Balliol established a home for scholars at Oxford. After his death, Balliol's widow Dervorguilla of Galloway established a permanent endowment for the college. ²⁶ bounty = generosity.
		75-76: "and if I ever fail to be loyal to England, let my happiness cease."
		76: three days after his appointment to the Scottish throne was announced, Baliol swore fealty for a second time to Edward, at Norham Castle; on the 30th he was crowned at Scone, and on 26 December, Baliol did homage to Edward at Newcastle in England. ⁹

		Fealty is an "oath of fidelity" made by a vassal to his lord. The vassal basically vows never to harm his lord or the lord's property. The ceremony is usually marked by the Lord handing an object symbolizing the vassal's fief to the vassal; with homage, a vassal acknowledges the bond of tenure that exists between he and his lord; the ceremony consists of the vassal surrendering himself to the lord by kneeling and giving his joined hands to the lord; the lord in turn clasps the vassal's hands in his own, symbolically accepting the "surrender".⁴⁶
78	Qu. Elin. Now, brave John Baliol, Lord of Galloway	= Baliol had inherited the lordship of Galloway from his mother. ⁹
80	And King of Scots, shine with thy golden head; Shake thy spears , in honour of his name ,	80: Shake thy spears = could this be an inside joke on the name of one of Peele's increasingly popular rivals? Perhaps, perhaps not, as the collocation of shake and spear was a common one in English literature throughout the 16th century. his name = Edward's, not Shakespeare's!
82	Under whose royalty thou wear'st the same.	81: another reminder of the fealty the Scots owe to England's monarch.
84	K. Edw. And, lovely England, to thy lovely queen, Lovely Queen Elinor, unto her turn thy eye, Whose honour cannot but love thee well.	83-85: Edward addresses himself in these lines, but why he should call himself lovely is unclear; perhaps the first lovely should be emended to royal , to connect with the queen's last line, or something similar. In the quartos, these lines appear between lines 40 and 41 above, but they are so out of place there, that we have adopted Deighton's ⁴² suggestion to relocate them to here.
86	Queen Elinor's Speech.	87: this odd little introductory title appears in the quartos. Dyce suggests that this speech, an encomium to Edward, is probably misplaced.
88	Qu. Elin. The welkin , spangled through with golden spots ,	= sky. = stars.
90	Reflects no finer in a frosty night
92	Than lovely Longshanks in his Elinor's eye: So, Ned , thy Nell in every part of thee,	= common nickname for "Edward": it derives from the ancient use of "mine" for "my", and the consequent transmutation of "mine Ed" to "my Ned".
	Thy person's garded with a troop of queens,	93: Thy person's = "thy person is", ie. "you are". garded = adorned; ⁷ the quartos print garded , which most editors emend to guarded . The OED does not have an entry for gard as a verb, but a quick search of the era's literature reveals that while garded usually is an alternate spelling for guarded , it is also clearly occasionally used to mean "adorned" (e.g. from 1592: "rich garded gowns", and from 1590: "a taffata hat and a garded gown"); additionally, the word is included in the reference works of Halliwell ³² and Skeat. ²⁴
		Having said that, garded likely has a secondary meaning of "guarded," since the word is also used in conjunction with troop .

94	And every queen as brave as Elinor, Give glory to these glorious crystal quarries ,	= finely dressed, with a secondary meaning of courageous, with garded (ie. guarded) and troop of line 93.
96	Where every orbe an object entertains Of rich device and princely majesty.	= panes of glass; the quartos print robe , emended by Deighton. There is only one robe , but of orbes - an easy typographical error - there are many. = exquisite or fanciful inventiveness.
98	Thus like Narcissus , diving in the deep,	= Narcissus was the beautiful but vain youth who had rejected the love of both the nymph Echo and a young man Ameinius; the latter, before killing himself, prayed to the goddess Nemesis to avenge him for Narcissus' cruel spurning; Nemesis, answering the entreaty, caused Narcissus to fall in love with his own reflection in a pool of water; unable to take his eyes away from himself, he wasted away until at length he was turned into a flower - the narcissus. It is odd that Elinor would compare herself to a lad who was in love with himself, when her point is to express her devotion to her husband. We may note that Narcissus did not either dive into the pool or drown, adding further strangeness to the lines.
100	I die in honour and in England's arms; And if I drown, it is in my delight,	89-100: Hook and Deighton invested a great deal time trying to give some sense to these lines, and so, rather than paraphrase, we will quote their interpretations directly; the citation of 93-97 is from Deighton, the rest from Hook: [line 89:] "the starry sky on a winter night [90-92:] sparkles no more than does Edward in his glass suit, and like the stars from the sky, the Queen's image (reflected in each of the orbs of glass) shines forth from every part of him. [93-97:] Thus, his person is decorated by a troop of queens, each of whom - as fine as Elinor - gives a glory to the glass quarrels, and every orb reflects a richly garbed and princely person. [98-100:] As Narcissus dived into the deep and drowned, so the Queen (by being reflected in the suit) appears to be drowning: but instead of in water, it is in her delight (ie. the King) in which she drowns, etc." (Hook, pp. 182-3; Deighton, p. 91). = "red lips", a common collocation. = sweetness.
102	Whose company is chiefest life in death, From forth whose coral lips I suck the sweet Wherewith are dainty Cupid's caudles made.	103: Wherewith = with which. Cupid's = Cupid is the cherubic god of love. caudles = warm, alcohol gruel, given to the sick and women in childbed.
104	Then live or die, brave Ned, or sink or swim .	= this still-common expression dates back at least to the early 16th century.
106	An earthly bliss it is to look on him. On thee, sweet Ned, it shall become thy Nell	= befit.

	Bounteous to be unto the beauteous :	= generous. = beautiful people. ¹
108	O'er-pry the palms, sweet fountains of my bliss,	108: O-er pry the palms = the editors note how difficult it is to make any sense of this clause, or indeed, "the rest of Her Majesty's speech" (Dyce, p. 386). over-pry = look over or examine. palms = Hook asserts the reference is to the palm tree, a symbol of a faithful and successful marriage. sweet...bliss = Edward's lips. ⁴²
110	And I will stand on tiptoe for a kiss.	108-9: it was common for major speeches to signal their closing with a rhyming couplet.
	K. Edw. He had no thought of any gentle heart,	111-4: Edward's response to Elinor is in rhyming couplets, before he returns to blank verse in addressing his nobles. He = ie. "any man".
112	That would not seize desire for such desart	112-4: perhaps "who would not let passion consume him for such excellence or worthiness (desart), if it were found in any woman as it exists in Elinor." Dyce expresses puzzlement over the meaning of these lines.
114	If any heavenly joy in women be, Sweet of all sweets, sweet Nell, it is in thee. –	desart (line 112) = less-common alternate spelling of desert , used here for the sake of the rhyme.
	Now, lords, along : by this the Earl of March,	115: having dispensed with the Scots, Edward expresses his intention to invade Wales at once to suppress Lluellen's rebellion.
116	Lord Mortimer, o'er Cambria's mountain-tops Hath ranged his men, and feels Lluellen's mind:	along = ie. "let's go". by this = common shortened version of "by this time".
118	To which confines , that well in wasting be ,	116-7: Mortimer has already gone ahead with his own troops to discover Lluellen's intentions; we remember that Mortimer, a great enemy of the Welsh rebel-leader, owned sizable possessions in the Welsh border-lands, ie. the marches.
120	Our solemn service of coronation past, We will amain to back our friends at need;	ranged = stationed. ¹
	And into Wales our men-at-arms shall march,	118-120: "now that my coronation is over, we will hurry (amain) into this territory (confines), which has been suffering (under Lluellen's violent raiding), to assist those who are our allies, ie. those who are enemies of Lluellen."
122	And we with them in person, foot by foot –	confines (line 118) = the modern stress would always be on the first syllable, but in Elizabethan poetry it could fall on the second syllable, as here.
124	Brother of Scotland, you shall to your home, And live in honour there fair England's friend. –	that well in wasting be (line 118) = in Scene II, we remember, Lluellen had ordered unrestrained and bloody raiding be carried out in the marches.
		During this period, Lluellen himself ranged far and wide, taking part in attacks as far south as Glamorgan on Wales' southern coast, and Shropshire, a county bordering Wales in the West Midlands (Jones, p. 253). = ie. "I".
		123-4: Edward addresses Baliol one last time; literary kings often referred to each other as brother .

	And thou, sweet Nell, Queen of King Edward's heart,	125-130: Edward seems to be suggesting that he and Elinor will necessarily see less of each other when he goes to war - unlike when she accompanied him on the Crusade.
126	Shall now come lesser at thy dainty love, And at coronation meet thy loving peers,	127: this line seems to erroneously suggest that Edward's coronation is still to come; but Deighton cleverly suggests that Edward is talking here to Baliol, and that this line should thus be moved to between lines 123 and 124 (in which case, thy should be emended to your).
128	When storms are past, and we have cooled the rage Of these rebellious Welshmen, that contend	= heralds. = parade of nobles.
130	'Gainst England's majesty and Edward's crown. –
132	Sound, trumpets! Harolds , lead the train along: This be King Edward's feast and holiday.
134	[Exeunt all except Queen Elinor, Joan, and Gloucester.]	134ff: the scene transfers to a street in London.
136
138	Enter the Mayoress of London from Church. Music before her.	Entering Character: the wife of the mayor of London, called here the Mayoress (spelled maris in the quartos), enters the stage; she is actually walking down the street in front of the Palace, with a band playing music in front of her.
140	Qu. Elin. Gloucester, who may this be? A bride or what? –	140: the queen wonders at the source of the noise.
	I pray ye, Joan, go see,	= please.
142	And know the reason of the harmony .	= music.
144	[Joan retrieves the Mayoress.]	= stage direction added by editor.
146	Joan. Good woman, let it not offend you any whit For to deliver unto me the cause	= in the least.
148	That in this unusual kind of sort You pass the streets with music solemnly.	= tell. = band or group of people.
150	Mayoress. Mistress, or madam , whate'er you be,
152	Wot you I am the Mayor of London's wife,	= the Mayoress is uncertain of the rank of her addresser, which would determine how she will address her, to wit, madam if she is a noble or woman of higher rank than she is, or mistress , if she is not.
154	Who, for I have been delivered of a son, Having not these dozen years had any before. Now in my husband's year of mayoralty, = know.
156	Bringing him a goodly boy, I pass unto my house a maiden bride:	155: "now in the year my husband is serving as mayor." The Mayors of London - meaning the city of London (as opposed to the mayors of modern greater-London) - have generally served single year terms since the very early 13th century. Even today, the honour is rotated among members of the different guilds of the city. The gentleman who serves as mayor as of this writing (summer 2019) is the 691st acting Mayor of London. ⁴⁸
158	Which private pleasure, touching godliness,	157: the giddy Mayoress compares herself to a joyful newly-wed.
		158-9: ie." I hope my private joy, being in the nature of Shall here no way, I hope, offend the good.	something which touches so close to God, does not offend others of higher rank who may be within earshot of my celebration."

160		161-2: unfortunately, the queen is indeed offended.
162	Qu. Elin. You hope so, gentle mistress; do you indeed? But do not make it parcel of your creed .	= not uncommon expression meaning "a part of your belief system".
164	Mayoress. [Aside] Alas, I am undone! it is the Queen; The proudest Queen that ever England knew.	= ruined.
166
168	[Exeunt Mayoress with Attendants.]
170	Qu. Elin. Come, Gloucester, let's to the court, and revel there.	= ie. go to.
	[Exeunt.]	137-167: in this still-yet-another strange scene, in which the Mayoress of London offends the Queen of England, Peele is setting up the audience to what will be Elinor's greatest outrage yet. The Mayoress' provocation hardly seems noteworthy, but of course that is the point, to emphasize Elinor's capricious prickliness. In the ballad A Warning-piece to England , we are told that Queen Elinor is offended by the Mayoress because she did not like: "To see that any one Should so exceed in mirth and joy, Except herself alone"
	SCENE IV.
	Outside Carnarvon Castle.	Scene IV: the English army has invaded Wales, and is approaching Carnarvon Castle, located in the town of Caernarfon, in extreme north-west Wales.
	Enter Rice ap Meredith, Sir David and Lluellen.	Entering Characters: Sir David has snuck away from the English camp to see his brother Lluellen . Lluellen and Rice ap Meredith are in front of Carnarvon Castle; David enters from the other side of the stage, quietly approaching them.
1	David. Soft! is it not Meredith I behold ?	= "wait a moment!" = see.
2	Lluel. All good, all friends. – Meredith, see the man	= As the stranger approaches and is seen but not recognized at first, Lluellen and Meredith (and any other soldiers a director may wish to have milling about) raise their swords; but Lluellen's first words here signal his recognition of David, and lets the others know to stand down.
4	Must make us great, and raise Lluellen's head : Fight thou, Lluellen, for thy friend and thee.	= ie. "who will". = ie. ensure Lluellen's promotion to king.
6	Mered. Fight, maugre fortune strong , our battle's strong,	7: maugre fortune strong = in spite of, or in the face of, adverse fortune: as Dyce notes, this makes no sense, but the editors offer no satisfactory emendation. battle's = army is.
8	And bear thy foes before thy pointed lance.	= carry or sweep away.

	10 David. Not too much prowess, good my lord, at once: Some talk of policy another while.	10-11: ie. "let's not get carried away discussing how strong your forces are; let's talk strategy first for a bit."
12	Mered. How come thy limbs hurt at this assault?	13: the sense seems to be, "why are you hesitant about our attacking Edward?" thy limbs hurt = appears to suggest the fabrication of an excuse to avoid fighting. Meredith may be suspicious that David cannot really be trusted.
14	14 Lluel. Hurt for our good, Meredith, make account. Sir David's wit is full of good device, And kindly will perform what he pretends.	15-17: Lluellen assures Meredith that any suggestion of David's must be treated with respect, as he is a very clever fellow, and can indeed be trusted to continue to lead on the king. Hurt (line 15) = read as "they hurt". device (line 16) = ideas. kindly = properly, satisfactorily. ¹ pretends = intends or professes to do. ⁴
16	20 David. Enough of this, my lord, at once. What will you, that I hold the king in hand?	20: "what do you want me to do, given that Edward com- pletely trusts me?" that I...in hand = literally, "that I am leading the king around by hand." = "help the Welsh."
22	22 Or what shall I especially advise, Sitting in council with the English lords, That so my counsel may avail my friends?	26: "tell the English I want Elinor (my love) turned over to me."
24	24 Lluel. David, if thou wilt best for me devise, Advise my love be rendered to my hand.	27-28: allusion to the famous myth about the Titan god Prometheus , who was punished by Jupiter for giving the gift of fire to humanity. For his troubles, Prometheus was chained to a boulder with fetters made by the blacksmith god Vulcan (one of whose epithets was Mulciber , or "fire allayer") ²⁷ in the Caucus Mountains; here, each day an eagle would eat his liver, which would regenerate in time to serve the eagle again the next day. that (line 27) = read as "that neither". erst (line 27) = once upon a time.
26	28 Tell them the chains that Mulciber erst made To tie Prometheus' limbs to Caucasus,	29: the Furies were pitiless goddesses of revenge and punishment. The Furies are not normally described as possessing fangs . = it was traditional for aspirants to the throne of England to describe the current possessor as a usurper . the usurper's = may be shortened to th' usurper for the sake of the meter.
30	Nor Furies' fangs shall hold me long from her,	31-33: If aught...friends = Lluellen is begging David to come up with an idea to help him get Elinor back, and doesn't want to hear about anything else. boot = help.
32	30 But I will have her from the usurper's tent.	35: a playing card metaphor: "we are down to our last ex- treme"; literally referring to a play that forces a player to
34	32 My beauteous Elinor! If aught in this, If in this case thy wit may boot thy friends, Express it, then, in this, in nothing else.
	34 David. Ay, there's a card that puts us to our trump;

36 For might I see the star of Leicester's loins,

38 It were enough to darken and obscure
This Edward's glory, fortune, and his pride.
First, hereof can I put you out of doubt:
40 Lord Mortimer of the king hath her in charge,

And honourably entreats your Elinor.

42 Some think he prays Lluellen were in Heaven,
And thereby hopes to couch his love on earth.

44 Lluel. No: where Lluellen mounts, there Ellen flies.
46 Inspeakable are my thoughts for her:
She is not from me in death to be divorced.
48 Go to, it shall be so; so shall it be.
Edward is full resolvèd of thy faith.
50 So are the English lords and barons all:
Then what may let thee to intrude on them
52 Some new-found stratagem to feel their wit?

54 David. It is enough. – Meredith, take my weapons;
I am your prisoner; say so at the least.

56 Go hence, and when you parlè on the walls,

Make show of monstrous tyranny you intend 58 To execute on me, as on the man
That shamefully rebels 'gainst kin and kind;

play his trump cards.¹

36: "if I could only see Elinor".

the star of Leicester's loins = a rather baroque way to describe Elinor, the daughter of Simon de Montfort, the Earl of Leicester.

= would be enough. = eclipse, ie. "cloud" or "take the shine off".

40: on the king's orders, Mortimer is responsible for holding Elinor prisoner. It seems that Mortimer has brought Elinor with him on the campaign, instead of leaving her under close supervision in London; this odd decision may be explained by the fact that her presence in Wales will be necessary to further the plot, as we shall see.

41: and Mortimer is treating her well.

42-43: ie. "there is a rumour that Mortimer wishes you were dead, in order to be able to marry Elinor himself." David interestingly refers to Lluellen in the third person here.

couch = the quartos print coache, which Dyce emends to couch, meaning literally "to lay horizontally", perhaps giving a suggestive feeling to the line.

= rises, shows himself.

= ineffable.

47: "no man will be allowed to take her for himself if I die."

48: "tell me your plan; whatever it is, we shall perform it."

49: "Edward is convinced of your loyalty to him."

51-52: poetically, "so is there anything stopping you from implementing some strategy to fool the English?"

let = obstruct.

48-52: the quartos assign these five lines to David, but the editors properly give them to Lluellen.

54-55: David will pretend to have been captured by Lluellen.
= "at least let us pretend so."

56: the Welsh can expect the English army to approach Carnarvon Castle, within which the Welsh will be protected, to offer battle; when the English appear, Lluellen should show himself on the castle parapets to negotiate with the invaders.

Such pre-battle parleys were normal in English wars, since the cost of fighting was so high and the outcome often seen by both sides as uncertain.

57-59: "pretend that you will put me to death for turning against my people and my family."

= family and nature; kind refers to the natural feelings of relationship that would normally keep a man from acting against his own family.

60	And 'less thou have thy love , and make thy peace With such conditions as shall best concern, David must die, say thou, a shameful death. Edward, perhaps, with ruth and pity moved, Will in exchange yield Elinor to thee, And thou by me shalt gain thy heart's desire.	= "unless Elinor is turned over to you".
62		= mercy.
64		= ie. in exchange for freeing David.
66
68	Lluel. Sweetly advised: David, thou blessest me, My brother David, lengthener of my life! – Friends, gratulate to me my joyful hopes.	= "offer congratulations to me", "compliment me for". ¹
70
	[Exeunt.]
	SCENE V.
	Carnarvon Castle, Wales.	Backstory of Scene V: the attack on Wales depicted in this scene can be said to correlate with Edward's first major invasion of 1577. See the Note at line 260 below.
	Enter King Edward, Sussex, [Mortimer,] and others.	Entering Characters: the English army approaches the castle. They appear to have been pursuing elements of the Welsh forces, who have been retreating back towards the castle.
1	K. Edw. Why, barons, suffer ye our foes to breathe?	1: "why do you allow our enemies a chance to rest?" Edward is exhorting his troops to keep moving and remain in close pursuit.
2	Assault, assault, and charge them all amain! They fear, they fly , they faint, they fight in vain.	= with all speed. = flee.
4	But where is gentle David? in his den ?	= if the line is correct, then we are seeing a rare bit of humour from Edward; the king alludes to 1 Samuel 22, in which the Biblical David, fleeing Saul, hides in a cave at Adullam. Dodsley wonders whether den should be emended to tent ; also, if Edward is genuinely worried about David's whereabouts, as the next line suggests, then the joke is out of place.
6	Loth were I aught but good should him betide.	5: "I would hate to have anything but good things happen to him."
8		= call to arms.
10	On the walls, enter [Lluellen], the Friar, Rice ap Meredith, with a dagger in his hand, holding Sir David by the collar, and soldiers.
12	K. Edw. Where is the proud disturber of our state, Traitor to Wales and to his sovereign?
14
16	Lluel. Usurper, here I am. What dost thou crave?	= "what is it that you need, ie. want?" Note that Lluellen addresses Edward with the deliberately insulting thee and thou , which the king of course returns in kind.
18	K. Edw. Welshman, allegiance, which thou ow'st thy king.

20	Lluel. Traitor, no king, that seeks thy country's sack, The famous runagate of Christendom.	= ie. "you are no legitimate king". = despoiling. ²
22		21: a jeering reference to Edward's ill-advised Crusade.
24	K. Edw. Ambitious rebel, know'st thou what I am, How great, how famous, and how fortunate? And dar'st thou carry arms against me here, Even when thou shouldst do reverence at my feet? Yea, feared and honoured in the farthest parts Hath Edward been, the noble Henry's son. Traitor, this sword unsheathed hath shinèd oft With reeking in the blood of Saracens;	runagate = vagabond or wanderer,¹ but also meaning "apostate", used especially (says Hook) to describe one who has abandoned Christianity for Islam, making this term extra-insulting to the ex-Crusader king.
26		= who.
28		= lucky.
30	When, like to Perseus on his winged steed,	= generally, even is pronounced as a monosyllable, with the medial v essentially omitted: e'en .
32	Brandishing bright the blade of adamant	= often.
34	That agèd Saturn gave fair Maia's son, Conflicting tho with Gorgon in the vale,	= generic term for "Muslims".
36	Setting before the gates of Nazareth,	31-34: like...steed = Edward compares his blood-soaked sword to the sickle of the Greek hero Perseus , who famously decapitated the Gorgon Medusa, the mythological monster with hair of snakes, whose face caused anyone who glanced at it to turn to stone.
38	My horse's hoofs I stained in pagan's gore, Sending whole countries of heathen souls	Perseus' winged steed was his famous flying horse Pegasus.
40	To Pluto's house: this sword, this thirsty sword, Aims at thy head, and shall, I hope, ere long, Gage and divide thy bowels and thy bulk,	32: blade = the quartos print blood , emended by Dyce. adamant = frequently alluded-to mineral of legendary hardness.
42	Disloyal villain, thou, and what is more?	33: the mythological allusion here is unknown. ⁷ 34: (Perseus) having fought Medusa in the valley. tho = then. ³
		35: Edward returns to describing himself in the Holy Land. In June 1271, a month after arriving at Acre, Edward marched his men to, and captured, Nazareth , in which town he slew all the inhabitants. ⁹ Setting = ie. sitting.
		= non-Christians, especially Muslims.
		37: if countries is correct, then we may choose to pronounce it as a tri-syllable: COUN-ter-ies ; but Dyce and others emend this to centuries , broadly meaning regiments; a century was a Roman military unit, consisting of, at least in theory, 100 men. ¹
		38: Pluto's house = hell or Hades; Pluto was the Roman god of Hades. thirsty = ie. thirsty for blood.
		= before.
		40: gage = measure; ^{1,7} but Dyce emends gage to gash . bulk = belly or body. ¹
		= ie. "what is more disloyal?" ³ But Hook puts a dash at the end of the line instead of a question mark (the quartos end the line with an unsatisfactory period), and suggests that Lluellen interrupts the raging king, who has not finished speaking.

	Lluel. Why, Longshanks, think'st thou I will be scared with words?
44	No: didst thou speak in thunder like to Jove ,	44: "no: even if you could thunder like Jupiter (Jove)". Jove is an alternate name for the king of the gods.
46	Or shouldst , as Briareus , shake at once A hundred bloody swords with bloody hands,	45: shouldst = "even if you". 45-46: as Briareus...hands = Briareus was one of three monstrous mythological gods possessing one-hundred arms and fifty feet. as (line 45) = like. = Lluellen means himself. = nothing.
48	I tell thee, Longshanks, here he faceth thee Whom naught can daunt, no, not the stroke of death. Resolved ye see: but see the chance of war:	49: Reolved ye see = ie. "I am determined, as you can see." see...war = "but take a look here at the fortunes or war."
50	Know'st thou a traitor and thou seest his head?	50-51: Lluellen directs Edward's attention to his new "captive" David. Know'st thou = "do you recognize".
52	Then, Longshanks, look this villain in the face: This rebel, he hath wrought his country's wrack ;	= "worked for Wales' ruin."
54	Base rascal, bad and hated in his kind, Object of wrath, and subject of revenge.	= Dyce's emendation for had .
56	K. Edw. Lluellen, call'st thou this the chance of war?	= fortunes.
58	Bad for us all, pardie , but worse for him. – Courage, Sir David! kings thou know'st must die, And noble minds all dastard fear defies .	= "by God", from the French par Dieu . = ie. "as you know". = "scorn or reject cowardly (dastard) fear."
60	David. Renowmed Edward, star of England's globe ,	61: Renowmed = old form of renowned . star...globe = an interesting metaphor: if England is the earth, Edward is its sun (star). We note the quartos get the line backwards, printing England for Edward , and Edward's for England's .
62	My liefest lord and sweetest sovereign, Glorious and happy is this chance to me,	= dearest.
64	To reap this fame and honour in my death, – That I was hewed with foul defilèd hands	= lucky. = occurrence.
66	For my beloved king and country's good. And died in grace and favour with my prince . –	64: ie. it is an honour to be able to die for Edward.
68	Seize on me, bloody butchers, with your paws :	= cut down.
	It is but temporal that you can inflict.	= ie. king. = an insulting suggestion that his captors are like dogs.
70	K. Edw. Bravely resolved, brave soldier, by my life !	69: a common trope: any harm one man can do to another is a merely earthly one, and of no value compared to the reward one can expect in Heaven.
72		= an oath.
74	Friar. Hark you , sir, I am afeard you will not be so resolved by that time you know so much as I can show you: here be hot dogs , I can tell you, means to have the baiting of you.	73-76: the Friar warns David that instruments of torture are to be used on David, which should break the king's resolve. Hark you = "listen up"; note that unlike Lluellen, the Friar addresses Edward with the respectful you . hot dogs = red-hot pincers; the OED defines dog as a "clamp" (sense 18) or "an instrument for drawing teeth" (sense 20). The Friar may also mean dogs to ironically refer to Lluellen and Meredith, tying back in to David's insult when he referred to the paws of his "captors".

78	Mort. Lluellen, in the midst of all thy braves , How wilt thou use thy brother thou hast ta'en?	This is the earliest instance of the collocation (pairing of words) hot dog(s) to appear in English letters.
80	Wilt thou let his master ransom him?	baiting = allusion to the popular Elizabethan pastime in which ravenous dogs are set on a chained-up bear or bull, winner take all.
82	Lluel. No, nor his mistress , gallant Mortimer, With all the gold and silver of the land.	= blustering threats. ²
84		79: "what do you intend to do to that brother of yours, whom you have captured?"
86	Mered. Ransom this Judas to his father's line! Ransom this traitor to his brother's life! No. – Take that earnest-penny of thy death. –	= ie. Edward.
88	This touch, my lord, comes nothing near the mark.	= his mistress opposes his master of the previous line.
90	[Meredith seems to stab Sir David into the arms and shoulders.]
92	K. Edw. O damnèd villain, hold thy hands! Ask and have.	= "traitor to the family."
94		= common expression for a symbolic down-payment of a penny or other small amount of money; Meredith refers to the first wound he will inflict on David.
96	Lluel. We will not ask nor have. Seest thou these tools?	88: "this little poke that I am about to give with my dagger does not yet come close to reaching David's vital organs."
98	[Lluellen shows hot pincers .]
100	These be the dogs shall bait him to the death,	= pretends.
102	And shall by piece-meals tear his cursèd flesh; And in thy sight here shall he hang and pine .	94: "I'll give you whatever you ask for"; Edward cannot stand to see David tortured.
104	K. Edw. O villains, traitors, how will I be venged !	= old pliers or forceps made red-hot in a flame.
106	Lluel. What, threat'ſt thou, Edward? Desperate minds contemn That fury menaceth: see thy words' effects.	100: Lluellen alludes back to the Friar's speech at lines 75-76 above. dogs = ie. the pincers.
108	[He seems to cut Sir David's nose.]
110	David. O gracious heavens, dissolve me into clay !	= pieces.
112	This tyranny is more than flesh can bear.	= suffer or languish. ¹
114	K. Edw. Bear it, brave mind, sith nothing but thy blood May satisfy in this extreme estate .	= avenged.
116		106: threat'ſt =threatens. 106-7: Desperate...menaceth = a difficult line: perhaps, "risk-ignoring minds scorn that which fury threatens."
118	Suss. My lord, it is in vain to threaten them; They are resolved, ye see, upon his death.	= cut off.
		111: dissolve = melt. clay = the poetic material from which bodies are comprised.
		= since. = circumstance.

	K. Edw. Sussex, his death, they all shall buy it dear: Offer them any favour for his life, Pardon, or peace, or aught what is beside: So love me God as I regard my friends! – Lluellen, let me have thy brother's life Even at what rate and ransom thou wilt name.	120: David's death will cost the Welshmen dearly. = negotiating term. = "anything else (they want)." = expense.
	Lluel. Edward, King Edward, as thou list be termed, Thou know'st thou hast my beauteous Elinor: Produce her forth to plead for David's life; She may obtain more than an host of men.	128: "you like to be called".
	K. Edw. Wilt thou exchange thy prisoner for thy love?	132: "your handing Elinor over will obtain more for you than could a whole army."
	Lluel. Talk no more to me; let me see her face.
	Mort. Why, will your majesty be all so base To stoop to his demands in every thing?	136: low, unworthy.
	K. Edw. Fetch her at once; good Mortimer, be gone.
	Mort. [Aside] I go; but how unwilling Heaven doth know.	140: 142: Mortimer confirms the rumours in this aside: he is indeed himself in love with his prisoner Elinor.
	Mered. Apace, Mortimer, if thou love thy friend.	= hurry. = ie. David.
	Mort. [Aside] I go for dearer than I leave behind.	146: "she whom I am retrieving is of more value to me than these friends I am walking away from."
	[Exit Mortimer.]
	K. Edw. See, Sussex, how he bleedeth in my eye. That beareth fortune's shock triumphantly.	150: 152: = "David bleeds before my eyes."⁷ = the adverse blows of fortune.
	Friar. Sa-ha, master! I have found, I have found.	154: 156: 158: 160: 162: 164: 166: 168: 170: 172: 174: 176: 178: 180: 182: 184: 186: 188: 190: 192: 194: 196: 198: 200: 202: 204: 206: 208: 210: 212: 214: 216: 218: 220: 222: 224: 226: 228: 230: 232: 234: 236: 238: 240: 242: 244: 246: 248: 250: 252: 254: 256: 258: 260: 262: 264: 266: 268: 270: 272: 274: 276: 278: 280: 282: 284: 286: 288: 290: 292: 294: 296: 298: 300: 302: 304: 306: 308: 310: 312: 314: 316: 318: 320: 322: 324: 326: 328: 330: 332: 334: 336: 338: 340: 342: 344: 346: 348: 350: 352: 354: 356: 358: 360: 362: 364: 366: 368: 370: 372: 374: 376: 378: 380: 382: 384: 386: 388: 390: 392: 394: 396: 398: 400: 402: 404: 406: 408: 410: 412: 414: 416: 418: 420: 422: 424: 426: 428: 430: 432: 434: 436: 438: 440: 442: 444: 446: 448: 450: 452: 454: 456: 458: 460: 462: 464: 466: 468: 470: 472: 474: 476: 478: 480: 482: 484: 486: 488: 490: 492: 494: 496: 498: 500: 502: 504: 506: 508: 510: 512: 514: 516: 518: 520: 522: 524: 526: 528: 530: 532: 534: 536: 538: 540: 542: 544: 546: 548: 550: 552: 554: 556: 558: 560: 562: 564: 566: 568: 570: 572: 574: 576: 578: 580: 582: 584: 586: 588: 590: 592: 594: 596: 598: 600: 602: 604: 606: 608: 610: 612: 614: 616: 618: 620: 622: 624: 626: 628: 630: 632: 634: 636: 638: 640: 642: 644: 646: 648: 650: 652: 654: 656: 658: 660: 662: 664: 666: 668: 670: 672: 674: 676: 678: 680: 682: 684: 686: 688: 690: 692: 694: 696: 698: 700: 702: 704: 706: 708: 710: 712: 714: 716: 718: 720: 722: 724: 726: 728: 730: 732: 734: 736: 738: 740: 742: 744: 746: 748: 750: 752: 754: 756: 758: 760: 762: 764: 766: 768: 770: 772: 774: 776: 778: 780: 782: 784: 786: 788: 790: 792: 794: 796: 798: 800: 802: 804: 806: 808: 810: 812: 814: 816: 818: 820: 822: 824: 826: 828: 830: 832: 834: 836: 838: 840: 842: 844: 846: 848: 850: 852: 854: 856: 858: 860: 862: 864: 866: 868: 870: 872: 874: 876: 878: 880: 882: 884: 886: 888: 890: 892: 894: 896: 898: 900: 902: 904: 906: 908: 910: 912: 914: 916: 918: 920: 922: 924: 926: 928: 930: 932: 934: 936: 938: 940: 942: 944: 946: 948: 950: 952: 954: 956: 958: 960: 962: 964: 966: 968: 970: 972: 974: 976: 978: 980: 982: 984: 986: 988: 990: 992: 994: 996: 998: 1000: 1002: 1004: 1006: 1008: 1010: 1012: 1014: 1016: 1018: 1020: 1022: 1024: 1026: 1028: 1030: 1032: 1034: 1036: 1038: 1040: 1042: 1044: 1046: 1048: 1050: 1052: 1054: 1056: 1058: 1060: 1062: 1064: 1066: 1068: 1070: 1072: 1074: 1076: 1078: 1080: 1082: 1084: 1086: 1088: 1090: 1092: 1094: 1096: 1098: 1100: 1102: 1104: 1106: 1108: 1110: 1112: 1114: 1116: 1118: 1120: 1122: 1124: 1126: 1128: 1130: 1132: 1134: 1136: 1138: 1140: 1142: 1144: 1146: 1148: 1150: 1152: 1154: 1156: 1158: 1160: 1162: 1164: 1166: 1168: 1170: 1172: 1174: 1176: 1178: 1180: 1182: 1184: 1186: 1188: 1190: 1192: 1194: 1196: 1198: 1200: 1202: 1204: 1206: 1208: 1210: 1212: 1214: 1216: 1218: 1220: 1222: 1224: 1226: 1228: 1230: 1232: 1234: 1236: 1238: 1240: 1242: 1244: 1246: 1248: 1250: 1252: 1254: 1256: 1258: 1260: 1262: 1264: 1266: 1268: 1270: 1272: 1274: 1276: 1278: 1280: 1282: 1284: 1286: 1288: 1290: 1292: 1294: 1296: 1298: 1300: 1302: 1304: 1306: 1308: 1310: 1312: 1314: 1316: 1318: 1320: 1322: 1324: 1326: 1328: 1330: 1332: 1334: 1336: 1338: 1340: 1342: 1344: 1346: 1348: 1350: 1352: 1354: 1356: 1358: 1360: 1362: 1364: 1366: 1368: 1370: 1372: 1374: 1376: 1378: 1380: 1382: 1384: 1386: 1388: 1390: 1392: 1394: 1396: 1398: 1400: 1402: 1404: 1406: 1408: 1410: 1412: 1414: 1416: 1418: 1420: 1422: 1424: 1426: 1428: 1430: 1432: 1434: 1436: 1438: 1440: 1442: 1444: 1446: 1448: 1450: 1452: 1454: 1456: 1458: 1460: 1462: 1464: 1466: 1468: 1470: 1472: 1474: 1476: 1478: 1480: 1482: 1484: 1486: 1488: 1490: 1492: 1494: 1496: 1498: 1500: 1502: 1504: 1506: 1508: 1510: 1512: 1514: 1516: 1518: 1520: 1522: 1524: 1526: 1528: 1530: 1532: 1534: 1536: 1538: 1540: 1542: 1544: 1546: 1548: 1550: 1552: 1554: 1556: 1558: 1560: 1562: 1564: 1566: 1568: 1570: 1572: 1574: 1576: 1578: 1580: 1582: 1584: 1586: 1588: 1590: 1592: 1594: 1596: 1598: 1600: 1602: 1604: 1606: 1608: 1610: 1612: 1614: 1616: 1618: 1620: 1622: 1624: 1626: 1628: 1630: 1632: 1634: 1636: 1638: 1640: 1642: 1644: 1646: 1648: 1650: 1652: 1654: 1656: 1658: 1660: 1662: 1664: 1666: 1668: 1670: 1672: 1674: 1676: 1678: 1680: 1682: 1684: 1686: 1688: 1690: 1692: 1694: 1696: 1698: 1700: 1702: 1704: 1706: 1708: 1710: 1712: 1714: 1716: 1718: 1720: 1722: 1724: 1726: 1728: 1730: 1732: 1734: 1736: 1738: 1740: 1742: 1744: 1746: 1748: 1750: 1752: 1754: 1756: 1758: 1760: 1762: 1764: 1766: 1768: 1770: 1772: 1774: 1776: 1778: 1780: 1782: 1784: 1786: 1788: 1790: 1792: 1794: 1796: 1798: 1800: 1802: 1804: 1806: 1808: 1810: 1812: 1814: 1816: 1818: 1820: 1822: 1824: 1826: 1828: 1830: 1832: 1834: 1836: 1838: 1840: 1842: 1844: 1846: 1848: 1850: 1852: 1854: 1856: 1858: 1860: 1862: 1864: 1866: 1868: 1870: 1872: 1874: 1876: 1878: 1880: 1882: 1884: 1886: 1888: 1890: 1892: 1894: 1896: 1898: 1900: 1902: 1904: 1906: 1908: 1910: 1912: 1914: 1916: 1918: 1920: 1922: 1924: 1926: 1928: 1930: 1932: 1934: 1936: 1938: 1940: 1942: 1944: 1946: 1948: 1950: 1952: 1954: 1956: 1958: 1960: 1962: 1964: 1966: 1968: 1970: 1972: 1974: 1976: 1978: 1980: 1982: 1984: 1986: 1988: 1990: 1992: 1994: 1996: 1998: 2000: 2002: 2004: 2006: 2008: 2010: 2012: 2014: 2016: 2018: 2020: 2022: 2024: 2026: 2028: 2030: 2032: 2034: 2036: 2038: 2040: 2042: 2044: 2046: 2048: 2050: 2052: 2054: 2056: 2058: 2060: 2062: 2064: 2066: 2068: 2070: 2072: 2074: 2076: 2078: 2080: 2082: 2084: 2086: 2088: 2090: 2092: 2094: 2096: 2098: 2100: 2102: 2104: 2106: 2108: 2110: 2112: 2114: 2116: 2118: 2120: 2122: 2124: 2126: 2128: 2130: 2132: 2134: 2136: 2138: 2140: 2142: 2144: 2146: 2148: 2150: 2152: 2154: 2156: 2158: 2160: 2162: 2164: 2166: 2168: 2170: 2172: 2174: 2176: 2178: 2180: 2182: 2184: 2186: 2188: 2190: 2192: 2194: 2196: 2198: 2200: 2202: 2204: 2206: 2208: 2210: 2212: 2214: 2216: 2218: 2220: 2222: 2224: 2226: 2228: 2230: 2232: 2234: 2236: 2238: 2240: 2242: 2244: 2246: 2248: 2250: 2252: 2254: 2256: 2258: 2260: 2262: 2264: 2266: 2268: 2270: 2272: 2274: 2276: 2278: 2280: 2282: 2284: 2286: 2288: 2290: 2292: 2294: 2296: 2298: 2300: 2302: 2304: 2306: 2308: 2310: 2312: 2314: 2316: 2318: 2320: 2322: 2324: 2326: 2328: 2330: 2332: 2334: 2336: 2338: 2340: 2342: 2344: 2346: 2348: 2350: 2352: 2354: 2356: 2358: 2360: 2362: 2364: 2366: 2368: 2370: 2372: 2374: 2376: 2378: 2380: 2382: 2384: 2386: 2388: 2390: 2392: 2394: 2396: 2398: 2400: 2402: 2404: 2406: 2408: 2410: 2412: 2414: 2416: 2418: 2420: 2422: 2424: 2426: 2428: 2430: 2432: 2434: 2436: 2438: 2440: 2442: 2444: 2446: 2448: 2450: 2452: 2454: 2456: 2458: 2460: 2462: 2464: 2466: 2468: 2470: 2472: 2474: 2476: 2478: 2480: 2482: 2484: 2486: 2488: 2490: 2492: 2494: 2496: 2498: 2500: 2502: 2504: 2506: 2508: 2510: 2512: 2514: 2516: 2518: 2520: 2522: 2524: 2526: 2528: 2530: 2532: 2534: 2536: 2538: 2540: 2542: 2544: 2546: 2548: 2550: 2552: 2554: 2556: 2558: 2560: 2562: 2564: 2566: 2568: 2570: 2572: 2574: 2576: 2578: 2580: 2582: 2584: 2586: 2588: 2590: 2592: 2594: 2596: 2598: 2600: 2602: 2604: 2606: 2608: 2610: 2612: 2614: 2616: 2618: 2620: 2622: 2624: 2626: 2628: 2630: 2632: 2634: 2636: 2638: 2640: 2642: 2644: 2646: 2648: 2650: 2652: 2654: 2656: 2658: 2660: 2662: 2664: 2666: 2668: 2670: 2672: 2674: 2676: 2678: 2680: 2682: 2684: 2686: 2688: 2690: 2692: 2694: 2696: 2698: 2700: 2702: 2704: 2706: 2708: 2710: 2712: 2714: 2716: 2718: 2720: 2722: 2724: 2726: 2728: 2730: 2732: 2734: 2736: 2738: 2740: 2742: 2744: 2746: 2748: 2750: 2752: 2754: 2756: 2758: 2760: 2762: 2764: 2766: 2768: 2770: 2772: 2774: 2776: 2778: 2780: 2782: 2784: 2786: 2788: 2790: 2792: 2794: 2796: 2798: 2800: 2802: 2804: 2806: 2808: 2810: 2812: 2814: 2816: 2818: 2820: 2822: 2824: 2826: 2828: 2830: 2832: 2834: 2836: 2838: 2840: 2842: 2844: 2846: 2848: 2850: 2852: 2854: 2856: 2858: 2860: 2862: 2864: 2866: 2868: 2870: 2872: 2874: 2876: 2878: 2880: 2882: 2884: 2886: 2888: 2890: 2892: 2894: 2896: 2898: 2900: 2902: 2904: 2906: 2908: 2910: 2912: 2914: 2916: 2918: 2920: 2922: 2924: 2926: 2928: 2930: 2932: 2934: 2936: 2938: 2940: 2942: 2944: 2946: 2948: 2950: 2952: 2954: 2956: 2958: 2960: 2962: 2964: 2966: 2968: 2970: 2972: 2974: 2976: 2978: 2980: 2982: 2984: 2986: 2988: 2990: 2992: 2994: 2996: 2998: 3000: 3002: 3004: 3006: 3008: 3010: 3012: 3014: 3016: 3018: 3020: 3022: 3024: 3026: 3028: 3030: 3032: 3034: 3036: 3038: 3040: 3042: 3044: 3046: 3048: 3050: 3052: 3054: 3056: 3058: 3060: 3062: 3064: 3066: 3068: 3070: 3072: 3074: 3076: 3078: 3080: 3082: 3084: 3086: 3088: 3090: 3092: 3094: 3096: 3098: 3100: 3102: 3104: 3106: 3108: 3110: 3112: 3114: 3116: 3118: 3120: 3122: 3124: 3126: 3128: 3130: 3132: 3134: 3136: 3138: 3140: 3142: 3144: 3146: 3148: 3150: 3152: 3154: 3156: 3158: 3160: 3162: 3164: 3166: 3168: 3170: 3172: 3174: 3176: 3178: 3180: 3182: 3184: 3186: 3188: 3190: 3192: 3194: 3196: 3198: 3200: 3202: 3204: 3206: 3208: 3210: 3212: 3214: 3216: 3218: 3220: 3222: 3224: 3226: 3228: 3230: 3232: 3234: 3236: 3238: 3240: 3242: 3244: 3246: 3248: 3250: 3252: 3254: 3256: 3258: 3260: 3262: 3264: 3266: 3268: 3270: 3272: 3274: 3276: 3278: 3280: 3282: 3284: 3286: 3288: 3290: 3292: 3294: 3296: 3298: 3300: 3302: 3304: 3306: 3308: 3310: 3312: 3314: 3316: 3318: 3320: 3322: 3324: 3326: 3328: 3330: 3332: 3334: 3336: 3338: 3340: 3342: 3344: 3346: 3348: 3350: 3352: 3354: 3356: 3358: 3360: 3362: 3364: 3366: 3368: 3370: 3372: 3374: 3376: 3378: 3380: 3382: 3384: 3386: 3388: 3390: 3392: 3394: 3396: 3398: 3400: 3402: 3404: 3406: 3408: 3410: 3412: 3414: 3416: 3418: 3420: 3422: 3424: 3426: 3428: 3430: 3432: 3434: 3436: 3438: 3440: 3442: 3444: 3446: 3448: 3450: 3452: 3454: 3456: 3458: 3460: 3462: 3464: 3466: 3468: 3470: 3472: 3474: 3476: 3478: 3480: 3482: 3484: 3486: 3488: 3490: 3492: 3494: 3496: 3498: 3500: 3502: 3504: 3506: 3508: 3510: 3512: 3514: 3516: 3518: 3520: 3522: 3524: 3526: 3528: 3530: 3532: 3534: 3536: 3538: 3540: 3542: 3544: 3546: 3548: 3550: 3552: 3554: 3556: 3558: 3560: 3562: 3564: 3566: 3568: 3570: 3572: 3574: 3576: 3578: 3580: 3582: 3584: 3586: 3588: 3590: 3592: 3594: 3596: 3598: 3600: 3602: 3604: 3606: 3608: 3610: 3612: 3614: 3616: 3618: 3620: 3622: 3624: 3626: 3628: 3630: 3632: 3634: 3636: 3638: 3640: 3642: 3644: 3646: 3648: 3650: 3652: 3654: 3656: 3658: 3660: 3662: 3664: 3666: 3668: 3670: 3672: 3674: 3676: 3678: 3680: 3682: 3684: 3686: 3688: 3690: 3692: 3694: 3696: 3698: 3700: 3702: 3704: 3706: 3708: 3710: 3712: 3714: 3716: 3718: 3720: 3722: 3724: 3726: 3728: 3730: 3732: 3734: 3736: 3738: 3740: 3742: 3744: 3746: 3748: 3750: 3752: 3754: 3756: 3758: 3760: 3762: 3764: 3766: 3768: 3770: 3772: 3774: 3776: 3778: 3780: 3782: 3784: 3786: 3788: 3790: 3792: 3794: 3796: 3798: 3800: 3802: 3804: 3806: 3808: 3810: 3812: 3814: 3816: 3818: 3820: 3822: 3824: 3826: 3828: 3830: 3832: 3834: 3836: 3838: 3840: 3842: 3844: 3846: 3848: 3850: 3852: 3854: 3856: 3858: 3860: 3862: 3864: 3866: 3868: 3870: 3872: 3874: 3876: 3878: 3880: 3882: 3884: 3886: 3888: 3890: 3892: 3894: 3896: 3898: 3900: 3902: 3904: 3906: 3908: 3910: 3912: 3914: 3916: 3918: 3920: 3922: 3924: 3926: 3928: 3930: 3932: 3934: 3936: 3938: 3940: 3942: 3944: 3946: 3948: 3950: 3952: 3954: 3956: 3958: 3960: 3962: 3964: 3966: 3968: 3970: 3972: 3974: 3976: 3978: 3980: 3982: 3984: 3986: 3988: 3990: 3992: 3994: 3996: 3998: 4000: 4002: 4004: 4006: 4008: 4010: 4012: 40

	Star of my fortune this, that shineth bright, Queen of my heart, loadstar of my delight, Fair mould of beauty, miracle of fame ! O, let me die with Elinor in mine arms! What honour shall I lend thy loyalty Or praise unto thy sacred deity ?	= guiding light or star. = manifestation, physical form. ¹ = honour or reputation. ¹
168		= godhood. ¹
170
172
174	Mered. Marry, this, my lord, if I may give you counsel: sacrifice this tyke in her sight, her friend ;	175: this tyke = "this cur or mongrel", meaning Mortimer. ¹ friend = lover, meant ironically.
176	which being done, one of your soldiers may dip his foul shirt in his blood; so shall you be waited with	177-8: so shall...Edward = "in this way you will attract as many men to your cause as soldiers went with Edward on his Crusade."
178	as many crosses as King Edward.	The total number of men who actually landed with Edward at Acre in the Holy Land was an unimpressive 1000, though reinforcements occasionally appeared as news of Edward's feats spread through Christendom.
180	K. Edw. Good cheer, Sir David; we shall up anon .	= "be up there shortly."
182	Mort. [Aside] Die, Mortimer; thy life is almost gone.
184	Elinor. Sweet Prince of Wales, were I within thine arms, Then should I in peace possess my love,	184f: Elinor is still outside the castle with the English.
186	And heavens open fair their crystal gates ,	186: heavens = though usually a monosyllable, heavens here is pronounced in its normal modern two syllables. crystal gates = literature of the period frequently alluded to the crystal gates of Heaven.
188	That I may see the palace of my intent.	= perhaps palace should be emended to place , both for the sense and the meter. ³
190	K. Edw. Lluellen, set thy brother free: Let me have him, thou shalt have Elinor.
192	Lluel. Sooth , Edward, I do prize my Elinor Dearer than life; but there belongeth more	= in truth.
194	To these affairs than my content in love:
196	And to be short, if thou wilt have thy man, Of whom, I swear, thou thinkest over-well ,	196: "you think too much of."
198	The safety of Lluellen and his men Must be regarded highly in this match .	= considered, taken into account. = agreement to terms.
200	Say, therefore, and be short , wilt thou give peace And pardon to Lluellen and his men?	= cut to the chase.
202	K. Edw. I will herein have time to be advised.	202: Edward wants time to consider the request, and phrases it in the context of needing to consult with his counselors.
204	Lluel. King Edward, no: we will admit no pause, For goes this wretch, this traitor, to the pot .	= ie. into the cooking pot, a metaphor for destruction or to a bad end. ^{4,24}
206	And if Lluellen be pursued so near, May chance to show thee such a tumbling-cast ,	206-7: if Edward does not cease pursuing the Welsh forces, Lluellen will throw David off the castle-walls. tumbling-cast = fall, somersault.
208	As erst our father when he thought to scape, And broke his neck from Julius Caesar's tower .	208-9: Lluellen compares David's anticipated fall to the one their father took once upon a time in the past (erst):

Suss. My lord, these rebels all are desperate.

Mort. [Aside] And Mortimer of all most miserable.

K. Edw. How, say you, Welshmen, will you leave your arms, 216 And be true liegemen unto Edward's crown?

218 Ist Sold. If Edward pardon surely what is past,

Upon conditions we are all content.

220 K. Edw. Belike you will condition with us, then?

222 Ist Sold. Special conditions for our safety first,

224 And for our country Cambria's common good,
T' avoid the fusion of our guilty blood.

226 K. Edw. Go to; say on.

228 Ist Sold. First, for our followers, and ourselves, and all,
We ask a pardon in the prince's word;
Then for this lord's possession in his love;
232 But for our country chief these boons we beg,
And England's promise princely to thy Wales,
234 That none be Cambria's prince to govern us
But he that is a Welshman, born in Wales:
236 Grant this, and swear it on thy knightly sword,

And have thy man and us and all in peace.

238 Lluel. Why, Cambria-Britons, are you so incensed?
240 Will you deliver me to Edward's hands?

Gruffydd ap Llywelyn, as mentioned in the note at Scene II.334, had a penchant for pursuing violent disagreements with his own family, and was at one time captured by his brother Davydd. After Henry III successfully invaded Wales in 1241, Gruffydd was handed over to Henry, and kept in honourable confinement in the Tower of London. A tall and heavy man, Gruffydd broke his neck falling while trying to escape on a rope made from his linen.⁹

Julius Caesar's tower = the Tower of London, traditionally thought to have been built by Caesar.

tower = the quartos print towne, emended by Dyce.

215-6: Edward addresses the common soldiers surrounding Lluellen.

215-6: leave your arms = "cease your fighting", ie. "end your rebellion".
= faithful subjects.¹

= ie. absolutely, unconditionally.

219: "then upon this and certain other conditions we will stand down."

In this interesting dynamic, the soldiers who are serving under Lluellen apparently need to make sure that Edward explicitly includes them in a pardon. It seems they may not trust their leaders to include them in any settlement.

221: slightly sarcastic: "oh, you presume to negotiate with me, a king?"

= ie. the soldier wants a guarantee that he and his fellows will not face any reprisals.

= presumably an aphesis (an omission of the opening vowel of a word) of effusion.

= king's.

= ie. Lluellen's. = Elinor.

= favours.

234-5: a prophetic request.

= men commonly made vows on their swords, which had the outlines of crosses, thus making such vows extra-binding.

= ie. "you will have Lluellen".

239-240: the suspicious Lluellen interprets the Soldier's last line to mean that his army will turn him (Lluellen) over to Edward for punishment.

are you so incensed = Lluellen incredulously asks if the soldiers are really so upset with him, perhaps for agreeing to terms with Edward after only getting Elinor back in turn, considering they have left their homes to embark on this dangerous adventure.

242	Ist Sold. No, Lord Lluellen; we will back for thee	= "support you", or "stand with you".
244	Thy life, thy love, and golden liberty.
246	Mort. [Aside]
248	A truce with honourable conditions ta'en; Wales' happiness, England's glory, and my bane .	= woe. ²
250	K. Edw. Command retreat be sounded in our camp. – Soldiers, I grant at full what you request –
252	David, good cheer. – Lluellen, open the gates.
254	Lluel. The gates are opened: enter thee and thine.
256	David. The sweetest sun that e'er I saw to shine!
258	K. Edw. Madam, a brabble well begun for thee; Be thou my guest and Sir Lluellen's love.	= quarrel; ³ Edward addresses Elinor.
260	[Exeunt all except Mortimer.]
		Edward's 1577 Invasion of Wales: the 1577 campaign was meticulously planned and brilliantly carried out. Well-supplied by sea, the enormous English army successfully penetrated the wilds of Wales by cutting a huge road through the north, deep into Lluellen's territory, cutting off his supplies. When English marines landed at Anglesey and harvested the grain crop on which the Welsh rebels were dependent for sustenance, Lluellen recognized he was beaten, and surrendered. Lluellen agreed to pay homage to Edward and to pay a fine of 50,000 marks.
		It was at this point that Edward began the construction of the first of the famous series of massive castles he would build throughout Wales to ensure English control of the region in the future (Jones, pp. 254-6).
		Elinor Reunites with Lluellen: the peace between Edward and Lluellen was, for a few years, so successful - at least on the surface - that Edward even allowed Lluellen to marry Elinor properly, and in fact himself gave the bride away (Jones, p. 259).
262	Mort. Mortimer, a brabble ill begun for thee;	262-272: in this soliloquy, Mortimer continues to bemoan the loss of Elinor to the enemy.
264	A truce with capital conditions ta'en , A prisoner saved and ransomed with thy life.	ill = badly.
266	Edward, my king, my lord, and lover dear, Full little dost thou wot how this retreat,	= containing fatal terms, ¹ ie. fatal for Mortimer.
268	As with a sword, hath slain poor Mortimer. Farewell the flower, the gem of beauty's blaze,	= ie. David. = ie. Mortimer's own.
270	Sweet Ellen, miracle of nature's hand! Hell in thy name, but Heaven is in thy looks:	= know.
		= the 1593 quarto prints Fuellen here - a clear error - but the 1599 quarto prints Lluellen , a more interesting idea; but we adopt Dodsley's emendation to Hell . With this change, Dodsley notes the pun of Hell in with Ellen (thy name) .

272

Sweet Venus, let me saint or devil be
In that sweet Heaven or hell that is in thee.

274

[Exit.]

271-2: assuming the emendation of line 270 is correct, then the meaning is: "no matter how Elinor is described, as Heaven or as hell, I want to be there with her."

Venus = the goddess of beauty.

271-2: as was common in Elizabethan drama. the speech and scene end with a rhyming couplet.

Roger Mortimer, sixth Baron of Wigmore: Born in 1231, this marcher lord married a wealthy and older Matilda de Braose, a woman whose father had been hanged by Lluellen on suspicion that he was carrying on an affair with Lluellen's wife. Like Gloucester, Mortimer early on aligned with the barons in the war against Henry, but likely had misgivings when de Montfort allied himself with Lluellen, a lifelong enemy of Mortimer's. Again like Gloucester, Mortimer changed sides, and became a permanent ally and friend of Edward's for the rest of his life.

Mortimer led the royal rear guard at Evesham, the battle which finally ended the Barons' War. As a reward for his services, Mortimer was granted the right to send the rebel leader Simon de Montfort's head back to his (Mortimer's) wife at Wigmore.

When Edward went on Crusade, Mortimer stayed behind, having been given the honour and responsibility of serving as guardian of Edward's family, land and interests. After Henry's death in November 1272, Mortimer, along with the archbishop of York and Robert Burnell, served as de facto regents of the island until Edward's return in August 1274.

Mortimer spent much of his life fighting Lluellen, occasionally in pitched battles, which sometimes he won, and sometimes he lost. In 1279, he celebrated his retirement from active campaigning by throwing an enormous and expensive bash and tournament at Kenilworth.

SCENE VI.

Carnarvon Castle, Wales.

Enter Jack and the Harper, getting a standing against the Queen comes in.

The trumpets sound.

*Enter Queen Elinor, in her litter borne by four Negro-Moors, Joan of Acon, Katherine and other Ladies with her, attended on by the Earl of Gloucester and her four Footmen:
one having set a ladder to the side of the litter,
Queen Elinor descends, and her daughter follow.*

Entering Characters: the Friar's novice Jack and our resident prophet the Harper find a vantage point to view the entrance of the Queen of England. The pair have no lines in this scene.

standing = a place to stand, as on a stand.

against...in = in anticipation of the queen's arrival.

Entering Characters: Queen Elinor enters Carnarvon Castle carried on a litter by four servants (actually, the stage directions imply that Joan too was borne in the litter, suggesting the vehicle was a two-seater). It is unstated whether the ladies have been carried all the way from London, or whether they rode a wagon or other vehicle till they reached the mountains of Wales, from which point litter-transport would be more comfortable.

The Earl of Gloucester has chaperoned Elinor and Joan on their journey from England to Wales.

1 Qu. Elin. Give me my pantafles.
 2 Fie, this hot weather how it makes me sweat!

 4 Heigh-ho, my heart! ah, I am passing faint!
 5 Give me my fan that I may cool my face.
 6 Hold, take my mask, but see you rumple['t] not.

 6 This wind and dust, see how it smolders me! –

 7 Some drink, good Gloucester, or I die for drink! –

 8 Ah, Ned, thou hast forgot thy Nell I see,
 9 That she is thus enforced to follow thee!

 10 Gloc. This air's distemperature, an please your majesty,
 11 Noisome through mountains' vapours and thick mist,

 12 Unpleasant needs must be to you and your company,

 14 That never was wont to take the air
 15 Till Flora have perfumed the earth with sweets,
 16 With lilies, roses, mints, and eglantine.

 18 Qu. Elin. I tell thee, the ground is all too base
 19 For Elinor to honour with her steps;
 20 Whose footpace, when she progressed in the street[s]
 21 Of Acon and the fair Jerusalem,
 22 Was [upon] naught but costly arras-points,
 Fair island-tapestry, and azured silk;

The queen's Ladies are her noble servants; it was considered a great honour for a female member of a noble household to be asked to act in the role of a servant for the royal family. Katherine, who may be Spanish, is one such Lady.

Elinor's footmen are those servants which would attend her everywhere on foot, even running alongside her carriage when she was travelling on wheels.

It seems it would require considerable acrobatic skill all-around for the litter-bitters to hold up the litter as the queen and Joan make their descent.,

Enter Queen Elinor: every element of this little pantomime, from the litter-bearers to the ladder, seems crafted to demonstrate Elinor's increasing megalomania; but as we shall learn, she is actually not so much to blame, as the queen is very pregnant.

Having said that, Elinor's conversation remains very self-centered, and she will continue to prove her complete disregard for those around her.

= slippers.

= an exclamation of disgust, as here, but also one of reprobation; this is a favourite interjection of the queen's.

= exceedingly.

= Renaissance women wore masks to protect themselves from the elements.

= smothers or suffocates.¹

= "am dying for lack of a drink"; later editors emend drink to thirst, but the expressions "die for drink" and "faint for drink" appear in other literature of the era, and are used exactly as Peele uses the phrase here, so we must consider the original correct.

8-9: an apostrophe: Edward is not present in the scene.
 = forced.

= ie. heat. = if it.

12: Noisome = harmful, noxious.²

and = the quartos print send, emended by Dyce.
 = "is necessarily or surely unpleasant".

14-16: "who are not accustomed to going outside until England is abloom with sweet-smelling flowers.

never = a monosyllable, the v omitted: ne'er.

Flora = goddess of flowers and gardens.

eglantine = a species of rose, the sweet-briar.¹

= mean, unworthy.

20-23: in Palestine, Elinor never travelled (progressed) anywhere without stepping on rich tapestries, carpeting (arras-points) or other fine cloth.

Acon = ie. Acre.

Jerusalem = the English did not ever see Jerusalem.

- 24 My milk-white steed treading on cloth of ray,
And trampling proudly underneath the feet
26 Choice of our English woolen drapery.
This climate o'er-louring with black congealed clouds,
28 That take their swelling from the marshy soil,

Fraught with infectious fogs and misty damps,
- 30 Is far unworthy to be once embalmed
With redolence of this refreshing breath,
- 32 That sweetens where it lights, as do the flames
And holy fires of Vesta's sacrifice.
- 34 Joan. Whose pleasant fields new-planted with the spring,
- 36 Make Thamesis to mount above the banks,
And, like a wanton, wallowing up and down 38 On Flora's beds and Napae's silver down.
- 40 Gloc. And Wales for me, madam, while you are here;
No climate good unless your grace be near.
- 42 Would Wales had aught could please you half so well,
Or any precious thing in Gloucester's gift,
44 Whereof your ladyship would challenge me!
- 46 Joan. Well said, my lord! 'tis as my mother says;
You men have learnt to woo a thousand ways.
- 48 Gloc. O madam, had I learnt, against my need,

- azured* = blue.
= striped cloth.³
- = the finest. = textile fabrics.¹
= frowning threateningly. = solidified, clotted.¹
= ie. grow. = marshy.¹
- 29: Fraught = filled, consumed.
fogs = in one of the funniest misprints to appear in a quarto, fogs appears as frogges in the 1593 edition.
- 30-31: even the air is unworthy to be breathed by the Queen of England.
embalmed = sweetened with a balmy fragrance.¹
redolence = the pleasant smell.¹
- 32: lights = alights, ie. lands on or appears.
32-33: as do...sacrifice = Elinor compares the sweetness of her breath to the perfumed odours of the sacrifices made by the Vestal Virgins, the famous priestesses who kept the eternal flame in the Temple of Vesta, the Roman goddess of the hearth (as a factual matter, the Vestal Virgins did not make sacrifices in their temple).
- 27-33: an English audience certainly would be highly entertained by this miserable portrayal of Welsh weather and climate.
- 35-38: Bullen suggests some lines have dropped out of the beginning of this speech; Joan, he continues, means to be saying that she prefers the gardens and neighbourhoods of London's castles to those of Palestine and Wales.
- = Latinized name of the River Thames. = rise.
= playful individual. = rolling about.¹
- 38: Napae = napae are flower nymphs;¹ normally it was swans which were described as having silver down.
Note the wordplay on down in lines 37-38.
- 40f: Gloucester, who would like to marry Joan, is absurdly obsequious to Elinor.
good = ie. is good.
37-41: note how the characters frequently slip into and out of speaking in rhyming couplets.
- 42-44: "I wish Wales possessed something of value which you could call for me to bring to you as a gift."
= demand as a right.
- 47: common sentiment describing how inventive men can be when it comes to trying to impress women.
Specifically, Joan recognizes that Gloucester is amusingly obvious in his attempts to gain Elinor's approval so she will be more inclined to permit Joan to marry him.
- 49-51: "if I had learned just one way to successfully court

50	Of all those ways to woo, one way to speed , My cunning, then, had been my fortune's guide.	a woman, out of all the many ways that exist, then my skill in applying this method would have led me to good fortune."
52		against (line 49) = anticipating. speed (line 50) = succeed.
54	Qu. Elin. Faith, Joan, I think thou must be Gloucester's bride. – [Aside] Good earl, how near he steps unto her side!	54-65: Elinor finally shows a sympathetic side, as she expresses her fondness for Gloucester and Joan. near = closely.
56	So soon this eye these younglings had espied. – I'll tell thee, girl, when I was fair and young, I found such honey in sweet Edward's tongue, As I could never spend one idle walk	55: Elinor saw early on how suitable a match Gloucester and Joan made.
58	But Ned and I would piece it out with talk. –	= take.
60	So you , my lord, when you have got your Joan. No matter, let queen-mother be alone.	= extend it. ¹
62	Old Nell is mother now, and grandmother may ; The greenest grass doth droop and turn to hay.	= ie. "it is the same with you".
64	Woo on, kind clerk , good Gloucester, love thy Joan: Her heart is thine, her eyes is not her own .	= ie. maybe soon.
66	Gloc. This comfort, madam, that your grace doth give Binds me in double duty whilst I live. Would God, King Edward see and say no less!	63: common trope describing the inevitability of aging and dying. = scholar. = Joan's eyes are constantly on Gloucester.
68		67-68: Gloucester is grateful for the queen's blessing.
70	Qu. Elin. Gloucester, I warrant thee upon my life My king vouchsafes his daughter for thy wife. Sweet Ned hath not forgot, since he did woo, The gall of love and all that 'longs thereto.	69: Gloucester hopes Edward will be as approving of this match as is Elinor.
72		= assure. = is pleased to grant.
74		= bitterness; the era's literature frequently notes that love may turn to gall , or is often mixed with it.
76	Gloc. Why, was your grace so coy to one so kind?	76: Gloucester asks if Elinor was so shy and reserved when Edward was courting her.
78	Qu. Elin. Kind , Gloucester! so, methinks, indeed: It seems he loves his wife no more than needs ,	= ie. "you call Edward kind?!"
80	That sends for us in all the speedy haste, Knowing his queen to be so great with child, And make me leave my princely pleasant seats To come into his ruder part of Wales.	79-83: Elinor is not pleased to have been sent for by Edward and forced to travel to meet him in Wales, when she is so heavily pregnant. needs = necessary.
82		= homes.
84	Gloc. His highness hath some secret reason why He wisheth you to move from England's pleasant court. The Welshmen have of long time suitors been , That when the war of rebels sorts an end ,
86	None might be prince and ruler over them But such a one as was their countryman;	= "been petitioners", ie. been asking.
88	Which suit , I think, his grace hath granted them.	= reaches an end. ¹
90
92	Qu. Elin. So, then, it is King Edward's policy	= petition.

94	To have his son – forsooth , son if it be – A Welshman: well, Welshman it liketh me. And here he comes.	= indeed. = pleases.
96		93-96: Elinor recognizes Edward's strategy; he has promised the Welsh a Welsh-born king, so he will have what he hopes will be a son born to him in Wales, whom he can one day impose as king on the Welsh.
98	Enter King Edward and his Lords.
100	K. Edw. Nell, welcome into Wales! How fares my Elinor?
102	Qu. Elin. Ne'er worse: beshrow their hearts, 'tis long on.	103: beshrow = beshrew, ie. curse. 'tis long on = the meaning is unclear here; Hook guesses that Edward interrupts her in mid-sentence, which suggests the line should end with a dash instead of a period.
104
106	K. Edw. Hearts, sweet Nell? shrow no hearts Where such sweet saints do dwell.
108	[He holds her hand fast.]	= tightly.
110	Qu. Elin. Nay, then, I see I have my dream: I pray, let go: – You will not, will you, whether I will or no?	110: there should be a pause after Elinor speaks this line, as Edward refuses to release the cranky Queen's hand. = "want you to or not?"
112	You are disposed to move me.	= upset.
114	K. Edw. Say any thing but so. Once, Nell, thou gavest me this .
116		= ie. her hand.
118	Qu. Elin. I pray , let go; ye are disposed , I think.	= please. = in a playful mood. ²
120	K. Edw. Ay, madam, very well.
122	Qu. Elin. Let go and be naught , I say!	= "keep quiet", ¹ but Dyce suggests "be hanged!"
124	K. Edw. What ails my Nell?
126	Qu. Elin. Ay me, what sudden fits is this I prove? What grief, what pinching pain, like young men's love, That makes me madding run thus to and fro?	127: ie. "that makes me act like a madman, having to travel all over the place like this?"
128	K. Edw. What, melancholy , Nell?	= the early term for "depression".
130	Qu. Elin. My lord, pray , let me go. Give me sweet water . Why, how hot it is!	= please. = fresh water. ¹
132
134	Gloc. [Aside] These be the fits, trouble men's wits.	134: in this fine little witticism, our prospective bridegroom observes that women can drive men crazy.
136	K. Edw. Joan, ask thy beauteous mother how she doth .	= "is doing". Edward presumably has finally released Elinor and stepped away from her.
138	Joan. How fares your majesty?
140	Qu. Elin. Joan, aggrieved at the heart, and angered worse,

	Because I cannot right me;	= "because I cannot sit up"; ¹ Dyce has emended the original language here - Because I came not right in - which makes no sense.
142	I think the king comes purposely to spite me. My fingers itch till I have had my will:	143: Elinor has a notion, and wants to implement it immediately.
144	Proud Edward, call in thy Elinor; be still.	144: Dyce notes the line, which makes little sense, is corrupted; a possible emendation, if a short one: "Sweet Joan, call in proud Edward."
146	It will not be, nor rest I anywhere Till I have set it soundly on his ear.	146: Joan understands what her mother means here, and will explain it to her father at line 155 below.
148	Joan. [Aside] Is that the matter? then let me alone.	148: "is that all it is? Then leave me out of it!"
150	Qu. Elin. Fie, how I fret with grief!
152	K. Edw. Come hither , Joan: know'st thou what ails my queen?	= here.
154	Joan. Not I, my lord: She longs, I think, to give your grace a box on th' ear.
156	K. Edw. Nay, wench, if that be all, we'll ear it well. – What, all amort! How doth my dainty Nell? Look up , sweet love: unkind! not kiss me once?	= humorous term for "take"; Edward re-approaches Elinor. = "are you sad", or "you seem dejected". = ie. "raise your head (for a kiss)." Elinor refuses.
158	That may not be.
160
162	Qu. Elin. My lord, I think you do it for the nonce .	162: ie. "I think you are behaving this way just for the purpose (of annoying me)."
164	K. Edw. Sweetheart, one kiss.
166	Qu. Elin. For God's sake, let me go.
168	K. Edw. Sweetheart, a kiss.
170	Qu. Elin. What, whether I will or no ? You will not leave ? let be, I say.	= "want to or not". = cease.
172	K. Edw. I must be better chid.	173: "I must be scolded more than this." Edward, solicitous, is trying to provoke Elinor into striking him, presumably with the hope that once she gets the blow out of her system, her mood will improve.
174
176	Qu. Elin. No, will?
178	[Striking him on the ear.]	= stage direction added by early editors.
180	Take that, then, lusty lord: sir, leave when you are bid .	= "you must stop (leave) when you are asked."
182	K. Edw. Why, so, this chare is chared .	= this business (chare) is accomplished (chared); ¹ chare is the etymological precursor of chore . ¹
184	Gloc. A good one, by the rood .	= an oath; rood = cross.
186	Qu. Elin. No force , no harm.	185: "it is no matter (No force), ¹ no harm was done."
	K. Edw. No harm that doth my Elinor any good. –	187: "nothing can be harmful if it benefits my Elinor."

188	Learn, lords, ' gainst you be married men , to bow to women's yoke; And sturdy though you be, you may not stir for every stroke. —	= "in anticipation of" or "in preparation for when you get married".
190	Now, my sweet Nell, how doth my queen?	189: you may...stroke = the sense is, "sometimes you just have to accept a blow."
192	Qu. Elin. She vaunts that mighty England hath felt her fist, Taken a blow basely at Elinor's hand.	= boasts. = ie. Edward.
194		= ie. "with my kind permission". = shrewish.
196	K. Edw. And vaunt she may, good leave , being curst and coy: — Lack nothing, Nell, whilst thou hast brought thy lord a lovely boy.	196: Edward is pleased to put up with anything, so long as Elinor can deliver him a healthy baby boy. whilst = until. ³
198	Qu. Elin. Ven acà ; I am sick ; —	198: Ven acà = Spanish for "come here", emended from the quartos' Veniacion . sick = nauseous. ¹
200	Good Katherina , I pray thee, be at hand .	199: Katherina = the quartos variously print the name of Elinor's servant as Katherine and Katherina ; it is possible this inconstancy is deliberate, as perhaps the Spanish Elinor might add the extra vowel at the end of the name; however, in this line, Katherina is unmetrical, and perhaps should be emended to Katherine . at hand = close by.
202	Kath. This sickness, I hope, will bring King Edward a jolly boy.
204	K. Edw. And, Katherine, who brings me that news shall not go empty-handed.	= whoever.
206		205: ie. shall be appropriately rewarded.
	[Exeunt.]	Gilbert de Clare, Eighth Earl of Gloucester: despite his portrayal in this play as a strong supporter of Edward, the real Gloucester's record is decidedly more mixed. Born in 1243, de Clare was married off to Alice of Angelou, the daughter of Hugh XI of Lusignan, the brother of Henry III, when he was only ten years old. During the Barons' War, Gloucester was a partisan of the anti-royalist faction, rising to a level of leadership second only to that of Simon de Montfort himself. Gloucester even led the center of the baronial army in the successful Battle of Lewes, at which Henry and Edward were taken prisoner. Quickly, however, Gloucester grew disenchanted with the manner in which the rapacious de Montfort was running England, and when Edward escaped his imprisonment on 26 May 1265 (with the help of the reliable ally Roger Mortimer), Gloucester was ready to meet with the prince to form a new and powerful alliance in combination with Mortimer; it was from this point forward that the tide began to turn in favour of the royalists. A brilliant military campaigner, Gloucester led the center of Edward's army at the decisive Battle of Evesham (1265). Once peace returned to the land, however, Gloucester began to express his misgivings at the way the noble supporters of the baronial party had been disinherited of their lands, at one point even temporarily capturing London itself, which he briefly held against Henry. By 1268, Gloucester was once again firmly in the royalist camp. Despite taking a pledge to go on Crusade with Edward, even vowing to pay 20,000 marks should he fail to go, Gloucester managed to avoid both making the trip to the Holy Land and paying the forfeit.

In 1271, the Earl divorced his first wife (after 18 years of marriage). Two decades later, he married Joan of Acre, on 30 April 1290. He was 48, she was 18.⁹

The aging Gloucester fought regularly in the wars against Lluellen, finally dying on 7 December 1296, and was buried at Tewkesbury.

SCENE VII.

Mannock-deny in Wales.

Enter Mortimer, Lluellen, Rice ap Meredith, and the Lady Elinor.

1 Mort. Farewell, Lluellen, with thy loving Nell.

2 Lluel. God-a-mercy, Mortimer; and so farewell.

4 [Mortimer retires and conceals himself
6 at the back of the stage.]

8 Mered. Farewell and be hanged, half Sinon's serpent brood.

The Scene: with the English having taken over Carnarvon Castle, the Welsh retire onto the mountain known as Mannock-deny.

Entering Characters: Mortimer accompanies Elinor as far as he can before handing her over to Lluellen.

= thank you.

5-6: Mortimer pretends to take his leave of the Welshmen, but he will actually loiter close by, trying to come up with a plan to recover Elinor.

8: half...brood = both quartos print the unintelligible half Sinons sapons brood.

Sinon was a character from the Trojan War, and his name became a by-word for deceit.

After ten years of fruitless war, the Greeks pretended to abandon Troy and sail for home. They left behind a spy, Sinon, who, purporting to have been himself thanklessly left behind by the Greeks, tried to convince the Trojans to bring the gigantic wooden-horse (which the Greeks had built as an offering to Minerva, the goddess of war) into the city. His arguments were opposed by the Trojan priest Laocoon.

Unfortunately for the latter, two sea serpents rose out of the sea and ate Laocoon and his two sons, which convinced the Trojans to accept the horse, to their own destruction of course.

At a minimum, then, Meredith is suggesting that Mortimer should be regarded as a spy, perhaps disapproving of Lluellen's friendly good-byes.

Accepting Dyce's emendation of sapons to serpent, Meredith's point may further be to suggest that Mortimer is no better than one of the two serpents which rose out of the ocean to consume the Trojan priest.

Dyce actually emends half Sinons to false Sinon's; this is no doubt correct, as the collocation false Sinon was used exactly around this time by other authors, including Shakespeare and Marlowe.

10 Lluel. Good words, Sir Rice: wrongs have best remedy,
So taken with time, patience, and policy.

10-11: "the best way to correct injuries is to practice patience, develop strategy (policy), and await the right

12	But where is the Friar? who can tell?	moment to strike."
14	Enter Friar.
16	Friar. That can I, master, very well;	= befallen, ie. happened.
18	And say, i'faith, what hath befel ,	= ie. go to.
	Must we at once to Heaven or hell?
20	Elinor. To Heaven, Friar! Friar, no, fie!	= for shame.
22	Such heavy souls mount not so high.	21: ie. "such souls as we possess, burdened so with sin and guilt, do not ascend to Heaven." Elinor refers to the sinfulness of the Welsh rising in rebellion against their lawful king.
	The Friar lies down.
24	Friar. Then, Friar, lie thee down and die;
26	And if any ask the reason why,
28	Answer and say thou canst not tell,
	Unless because thou must to hell.	= go to.
30	Elinor. No, Friar, because thou didst rebel: – Gentle Sir Rice , ring out thy knell!	31: Elinor asks Meredith to ring a death knell, the sounding of a bell that occurs during or after a funeral. Grammatically, line 31 is confusing, as it is unclear, from the way it appears in the quartos, whether Elinor is addressing Meredith or the Friar. Dyce suggests Gentle Sir Rice should be understood as Let Gentle Sir Rice , in which case the comma in the line is superfluous, and that Elinor is talking still to the Friar.
32	Lluel. And Maddock toll thy passing-bell .	Having wrung out every possible concession they could out of Edward, the Welsh turn their attention to play. Their first order of business is to perform a brief mock-funeral for the Friar. The earliest proper English stage comedy, 1566's Ralph Roister Doister , contained an extended mock funeral for one of its characters.
		33: Maddock = the quartos print Maddocke ; Hook wonders if this is a reference to Madog ap Llywelyn , a Welshman who would go on to lead a third rebellion against Edward in 1294-5; yay or nay, the name does not appear again in the play. This third Welsh rebellion, led by Madog, actually resulted in an English invasion of Wales that was even larger than Edward's first two attacks of 1277 and 1282. Needless to say, Edward once again was successful in crushing the pesky Welsh rebels.
34	So, there lies a straw .	There was also a rare word maddock , which means maggot or earthworm. ^{1,7} passing-bell = a bell rung to announce a death.
36	And now to the law. Masters and friends; naked came we into the world,	34: "so, I will say no more (about that);" to lay a straw means "to stop", often used as shorthand for "to speak no more about a subject". 36-38: naked...wilderness = in this mock sermon, Lluellen adds snippets of quotes from the Bible, including Job 2:21's naked are we turned out of the good towns into the wilderness. Let me see; mass , methinks we are a handsome commonwealth , a handful of good fellows,	"naked I came", and "into the wilderness", the latter which appears multiple times in the Bible.

38		38: mass = an oath. 38-39: methinks...fellows = "I believe we are a fine collection of folks." commonwealth = body politic. ²
40	set a-sunning to dog on our own discretion . What say you, sir[s]? We are enough to keep a passage : will you	= the sense of this unique expression seems to be, "able to do whatever we want to"; dog , when used as a verb as here, normally meant "to follow around" or, figuratively, "to beset" ¹ , but those senses don't quite fit here.
41		41: We are...passage = "there are enough of us here to hold a mountain pass", ie. against any army that may march against them. keep a passage = a common expression, meaning to successfully prevent an enemy from passing through a particular location.
42	be ruled by me? We'll get the next day from	41-42: will you...by me = "will you all do as I ask?" 42-44: We'll get...cause = the crew will get a book describing the tales of Robin Hood, which the Friar (who may be the only literate person present) can read and instruct the others regarding how to go about playing the characters of the legend. Actually, the earliest known literary mention of Robin Hood is from a 1377 work entitled Piers the Plowman - published a century after the years our play takes place. the next day = tomorrow.
43	Brecknock the Book of Robin Hood; the Friar he shall	= the fact that the Welsh are near this town in south Wales suggests that Bullen is correct in placing Mannock-deny in Brecknockshire, and the mountain is therefore not Cadir Idris, as suggested by Sugden and Hook.
44	instruct us in this cause, and we'll even here fair and well: since the king hath put us amongst the discarding	44-45: we'll even...well = the sense is "we can do this (ie. play this game) fine right here where we are."
46	cards, and, as it were, turned us with deuces and treys out of the deck, every man take his standing on	45-47: the king...deck = an extended metaphor from cards, in which Lluellen describes himself and his fellows as outcasts, comparing them all to a collection of discarded cards, as unwanted as twos and threes. The broad point is that Edward is no longer paying them any attention.
48	Mannock-deny, and wander like irregulars up and	47-48: every man...Mannock-deny = "each of you will now play the role I assign you on this mountain". standing = rank or profession. ¹ = the only turn-of-the-17th-century definition of irregular as a noun which applied to persons, according to the OED, is sense B.n.2(a), " One not belonging to the regular body; an agent of any kind who does something irregularly; one not of the 'regular' clergy; an irregular practitioner, attendant, etc. " The modern meaning of irregular - describing a soldier not of the regular army - did not appear until the early 19th century. Hook suggests "men not attached to any master or livery."

	down the wilderness. I'll be Master of Misrule , I'll be	= the title given to the individual chosen to preside over Christmas games; a late 15th century term. ¹
50	Robin Hood, that's once ; cousin Rice, thou shalt be Little John: and here's Friar David as fit as a die for	= "that's final", "that's flat". ³
52	Friar Tuck. Now, my sweet Nell, if you will make up the mess with a good heart for Maid Marian, and do	= a unique simile.
54	well with Lluellen under the green-wood trees , with as good a will as in the good towns, why, plena est curia .	52-53: make up the mess = make up the fourth; a mess was a company of people, usually numbering four, who dined together at a banquet, all being served from the same bowls, etc. ¹
56	Elinor. My sweetest love, and this my infract fortune	= this clause appears as the first line of a song in Shakespeare's As You Like It .
58	Could never vaunt her sovereignty,	= "our company is now complete", a seeming play on the Latin legal expression, in plena Curia (in full court). ³⁰
	And shouldst thou pass the ford of Phlegethon ,	57-58: perhaps something like, "my shattered fortune can never boast (vaunt) of its excellence", but Dyce throws his hands up, suggesting the lines are incomprehensible nonsense; the very rare word infract usually meant "unbroken", but the OED cites this line as the earliest example of infract meaning "broken".
60	Or with Leander swim the Hellespont ,	59: pass = cross. Phlegethon = oft referred-to river of Hades, but one comprised of fire rather than water.
	In deserts Onophrius ever dwell,	60: Leander was a mythological youth who famously swam every night across the Hellespont (the modern Dardanelles in Turkey) to visit his love, Hero, a priestess of Aphrodite.
62	Or build thy bower on Aetna's fiery tops ,	= a Catholic hermit who dwelt in the desert for seventy years, now a saint. ⁴³
64	Thy Nell would follow thee and keep with thee, Thy Nell would feed with thee and sleep with thee.	= home. ¹ = near the peak of Sicily's famed volcano, Mt. Etna.
66	Friar. O Cupido quantus quantus!	66: Latin: "O Cupid, how great, how great!" ³⁰
68	Mered. Bravely resolved , madam. – And then what rests my Lord Robin, but we will live and die together like Camber-Britons, – Robin Hood, Little John, Friar Tuck, and Maid Marian?	= excellently decided. = remains (to do). = ie. "but that".
72	Lluel. There rests nothing now, cousin, but that I sell my chain to set us all in green , and we'll all play the pioners to make us a cave and cabin for all weathers.	73-74: sell my chain = sell off his gold chain which he, as a person of rank, might wear. ³
74		74: "to furnish us with green outfits". = "act the roles of".
76	Elinor. My sweet Lluellen, though this sweet be gall ,	75: pioners = miners, diggers. ² to make...cabin = ie. "to construct us places to live".
		= "though there is bitterness (gall) in this fun"; the sensitive Elinor recognizes that in this play-acting, Lluellen is covering up what must be major disappointment over the fizzling out of his rebellion, and the fact that he will never be King of England after all.
		It was common in literature to oppose gall and sweet , usually pairing them to make a metaphorical point (e.g. "sweet honey tear, sweeten my bitter gall," from 1596).

78	Patience doth conquer by out-suffering all.	78: another common trope, that patience conquers suffering and despair.
80	Friar. Now, Mannock-denye , I hold thee a penny,	= the Friar addresses the mountain. = bet.
82	Thou shalt have neither sheep nor goat But Friar David will fleece his coat:	81-82: the Friar asserts metaphorically that he expects to be able to rob any traveller who passes by.
	Wherever Jack, my novice, jet ,	= struts.
84	All is fish with him that comes to net; –
86	David, this year thou pay'st no debt.	84: proverbial: anyone coming within Jack's reach too is guaranteed to be a victim of trickery and hence robbery; Jack has apparently been a good student of the Friar's!
88	[Exeunt all except Mortimer.]
90	Mort. [Coming forward from his concealment] [Aside] Why, Friar, is it so plain , indeed?
92	Lluellen, art thou flatly so resolved To roist it out, and roost so near the king?	92: "to behave so uproariously (ie. revel), ¹ when the English are close by?" = path.
94	What, shall we have a passage kept in Wales For men-at-arms and knights adventurous?	= ie. "are your intentions so obvious".
96	By cock , Sir Rice, I see no reason why Young Mortimer should [not] make one among ,	= absolutely.
98	And play his part on Mannock-denye here, For love of his belovèd Elinor. His Elinor! were she his, I wot ,	99-105: Mortimer pursues his daydream in which Elinor, rather than being forced to live in the miserable climate and wilds of Wales, resides instead in the lap of luxury as his wife. wot = know.
100	The bitter northern wind upon the plains, The damps that rise from out the queachy plots ,	= read as "not the".
102	Nor influence of contagious air should touch;	= vapours, mists. = marshy ground. ¹
	But she should court it with the proudest dames ,	102: nor would Elinor be touched by corrupting or disease-spreading (contagious) air.
104	Rich in attire, and sumptuous in her fare , And take her ease in beds of softest down.	103: court it = play the courtier, ie. one who attends or lives at the king's court. The quarto prints court yet , which makes sense, but court it was a common expression, and Dyce has emended the text accordingly. dames = noble ladies.
106	Why, Mortimer, may not thy offers move, And win sweet Elinor from Lluellen's love?	= appearance or bearing. ¹
108	Why, pleasant gold and gentle eloquence Have 'ticid the chaste nymphs, the fairest dames .	105: emended by Dyce from safest; soft down was a common collocation.
110	And vaunts of words, delights of wealth and ease	106-7: may not...love = "cannot your own expressions of love win Elinor from Lluellen?"
		= polished speech.
		= enticed, won over. = most beautiful ladies.
		110: "and flattering or smooth words and the temptation of wealth and easy living".

	Have made a nun to yield. Lluellen's [sun], Being set to see the last of desperate chance. Why should so fair a star stand in a vale, And not be seen to sparkle in the sky?	111: this line was originally printed without punctuation and without the word sun , and as such unintelligible. I have accepted the later editors' emendations. made (line 111) = persuaded. 111-4: Lluellen's...sky = "with Lluellen's fortune (his sun) falling short of its goal, shouldn't Elinor (the star) be seen by all the best people instead of being hidden in this mountain valley?"
112 114		115-6: it seems likely the lines are corrupt. is enough = ie. "is enough to cause". change = to exchange. 115-6: the allusion is to the story of the Titan deity Mnemosyne , goddess of memory, with whom Jupiter slept for nine nights in a row, resulting in the birth of the nine Muses, the goddesses who became protectresses of all the arts.
116	It is enough Jove change his glittering robes To see Mnemosyne and the flies .	116: the meaning of the line is unclear, but Mitford, in rewriting lines 115-6, thinks flies refers to Jove flying to see Mnemosyne; here is his suggestion for the two lines: It is enough. Jove changes glittering robes, And then he flies to see Mnemosyne. Needless to say, though his emendation makes more sense, it is hardly representative of 16th century diction. For line 116, Bullen proposes " to woo the mother of the Muses nine. "
118	Masters, have after gentle Robin Hood: You're not so well accompanied, I hope,	= addressed to the audience. = "let's follow". ²
120	But if a potter come to play his part, You'll give him stripes or welcome, good or worse. —	118-120: briefly, "you (ie. the audience) are not already so satisfactorily supplied with companions (that you can't accept one more)"; Mortimer plans to join the Welsh in the disguise of a potter.
122 124	Go, Mortimer, and make there love-holidays : The King will take a common 'scuse of thee, And hath more men to attend than Mortimer.	119-120: more specifically, "if a strange potter comes to play his part (an allusion to the Welsh playing characters out of Robin Hood), you will welcome him one way or another - either with jeers or cheers." stripes = lashes of a whip, applied metaphorically to mean "voice of disapproval". ¹ = ie. humorous term meaning "time of courting". = "you can easily excuse your absence from Edward for a little while". 123: the quarto reads, And who hath etc., but makes little sense as such; I have accepted Bullen's emendation.
	[Exit.]
	SCENE VIII.
	Mannock-den in Wales.	Scene VIII: in yet another odd scene, the Welsh, still hiding in the woods, and dressed in verdant costumes, play Robin Hood.
	Enter Lluellen, Rice ap Meredith, Friar, the Lady Elinor and their train.	= attendants.
	They are all clad in green, and sing,	Blithe and Bonny: this song appeared in Thomas Lodge's

"Blithe and Bonny." The song ended.

1 Lluel. Why, so, I see, my mates, of old,
2 All were not lies that beldames told
3 Of Robin Hood and Little John,
4 Friar Tuck and Maid Marian.

6 Friar. Ay, forsooth, master.

8 Lluel. How well they couched in forest green,
10 Frolic and lively withouten teen,
11 And spent their day in game and glee:
12 Lluellen, do seek if aught please thee,
13 Nor, though thy foot be out of town,
14 Let thine look black on Edward's crown;

14 Nor think this green is not so gay
15 As was the golden rich array;
16 And if, sweet Nell, my Marian,
17 Trust me, as I am gentleman.
18 Thou art as fine in this attire,
19 As fine and fit to my desire,
20 As when of Leicester's hall and bower
21 Thou wert the rose and sweetest flower. –
22 How sayest thou, Friar, say I well?
23 For anything becomes my Nell.

24 Friar. Never made man of a woman born
25 A bullock's tail a blowing horn;

28 Nor can an ass's hide disguise
29 A lion, if he ramp and rise.

30 Elinor. My lord, the Friar is wondrous wise.

32 Lluel. Believe him, for he tells no lies. – 33 But what doth Little John devise?

34 Mered. That Robin Hood beware of spies.

36 An agèd saying and a true,
37 Black will take no other hue;

prose romance Rosalynde, published in 1592, a year before Edward I was printed; the lyrics appear at the end of the play.

2-4: the stories the old women (beldames) told of Robin Hood were true after all.

The quartos print bedlams, meaning lunatics, but the editors generally emend it to beldames, so that the line alludes to the proverbial old wives' tales (Peele in fact wrote a play entitled The Old Wives' Tale).

= truly.

8: "how well did Robin Hood and his band (they) conceal themselves in the forest".

= merry.¹ = without cares or grief.^{2,3}

11-13: Dyce notes these lines are corrupt and unintelligible.
do = a commentator of old suggests emending do to go.
aught = anything.

= there was an expression, to look black on, which meant "to frown upon" or "to look angrily at";^{1,7} Bullen proposes changing this clause to Let eyne look back on, meaning "let your eyes look back on": perhaps the best solution is to combine the two ideas, and emend this to Let eyne look black on, or Let thy eyne look black on, or even Let thee look black on. No matter which emendation is adopted, however, these last few lines still don't make much sense.

14-15: "don't think for a second that dressing in green like this is not as much fun as being clothed in the fine attire of a lord.

= in the hallway and home of Elinor's father, the Earl of Leicester.

= befits, ie. looks good on.

25-26: no man, who was born from a woman, has ever turned an ox's tail into a musical instrument. Unclear at best.

27-28: in a more apropos analogy, the Friar suggests that even a homely outfit cannot conceal Elinor's beauty.
ramp = rear.¹

= ie. Meredith. = plan, scheme.

35: Meredith has perhaps been musing; he is worried about the king's agents finding them out.

37: proverbial: no matter how it appears on the surface, evil will always be evil. Meredith warns that Edward and the English, no matter how cordial they have been in their dealings with the Welsh, are not to be trusted.

38	He that of old hath been thy foe Will die but will continue so.	38-39: an old enemy will remain ever so, even after death.
40
42	Friar. O, masters , whither , shall we [go]? Doth any living creature know?	= common vocative term of respect. = to where.
44	Lluel. Rice and I will walk the round.	44: Lluellen, heeding Meredith's admonition, will take a stroll with the latter to the outside world to see if there is any news to be learned.
46	Friar, see about the ground,	45: the Friar is asked to stay behind and keep an eye on the camp. 44-49: line 44 may tie in better with line 49 than does line 45, so Hook tentatively proposes reversing lines 44 and 45.
48
50	Enter Mortimer [disguised as a Potter]. And spoil what prey is to be found. My love I leave within in trust, Because I know thy dealing just –	49: "and rob or plunder any man who comes by." 50: the Friar must also be responsible for protecting Elinor. = ie. "you will behave honourably"; Lluellen may be naïve here.
52	Come, potter, come, and welcome too. Fare as we fare, and do as we do. –	52-53: it seems that Lluellen sees the potter and welcomes him to the camp.
54	Nell, adieu: we go for news.
56	[Exeunt Lluellen and Rice ap Meredith.]	56: Mortimer eavesdrops on the Friar and Elinor, who don't seem to have noticed the former's arrival, or perhaps they assume he has gone along with Lluellen and Meredith.
58	Friar. A little serves the friar's lust, When nolens volens fast I must:	58-59: "if I am forced to be chaste, then I must make do with whatever female companionship I am provided with." nolens volens fast = willing or unwilling to remain celibate.
60	Master, at all that you refuse.	60: perhaps, "I am ready to risk everything to take advantage of your (Lluellen's) absence and make an attempt at seducing the one you leave behind." at all = a gambler's term, cried out when one is prepared to risk all on a single roll. ^{4,49}
62	Mort. [Aside] Such a potter would I choose, When I mean to blind a 'scuse: While Robin walk with Little John, The Friar will lick his Marian: So will the potter if he can.	62-63: the meaning here is obscure.
64
66		65-66: the sense is that the Friar can be expected to behave inappropriately, even seduce, Lluellen's lady if he can - but so will Mortimer, if he can. lick = Dyce remarks that lick is not the right word here; but Hook observes that lick is used in some contemporary works to mean "kiss", even if this sense is not given in the OED.
68	Elinor. Now, Friar, sith your lord is gone. And you and I are left alone, What can the friar do or say To pass the weary time away? –	= since.
70		70-73: Elinor reveals her unhappiness with the way events have played out.

72	Weary, God wot , poor wench , to thee,	= knows. = meaning herself.
74	That never thought these days to see.
76	Mort. [Aside] Break, heart! and split, mine eyes, in twain! Never let me hear those words again.	68-73: Elinor is simply looking for help to while away the time until Lluellen returns, but Mortimer, mortified, mistakenly thinks she is offering herself to the Friar! = in two; but doesn't Mortimer already have two eyes?
78
80	Friar. What can the Friar do or say To pass the weary time away?	81-82: the mix of pronouns make these lines tricky to interpret, but I should probably be emended to he , as the Friar is referring to himself in this speech in the third person; the meaning of these lines seems to be something like, "I would dare do more than I can say, but I am apprehensive about being able to get away if I get caught flirting with Elinor."
82	More dare I do than he dare say, Because he doubts to have away .	to have away = to escape, get away. ¹
84	Elinor. Do somewhat , Friar, say or sing, That may to sorrows solace bring; And I meanwhile will garlands make.	= something. = wreaths made of flowers or leaves. ¹
88	Mort. [Aside] O, Mortimer, were it for thy sake, A garland were the happiest stake That ever this hand unhappy drew!	88-90: the sense is, if Elinor were only making a garland for Mortimer, it would be the best stake he ever won. stake = gambling wager, the pot.
92	Friar. Mistress, shall I tell you true? I have a song, I learned it long ago: I wot not whether you'll like it well or no .
94
96	'Tis short and sweet, but somewhat brawled before: Once let me sing it, and I ask no more.	94: wot = know. no = the quartos print ill , which makes sense, but does not rhyme; Dyce's emendation to no is accepted.
98	Elinor. What, Friar, will you so indeed? Agrees it somewhat with your need?	= possibly meaning "sung noisily or clamorously"; ¹ but an earlier editor suggests emending to this to trolled , which means "sung merrily". ^{1,4}
100	Friar. Why, mistress, shall I sing my creed ?	99: ie. "does the song fit your present mood?", ie. "is this what you want to do?"
102	Elinor. That's fitter of the two at need .	= ie. "sing a song of Christian doctrine instead?"
104
106	Mort. [Aside] O, wench, how mayst thou hope to speed ?	103: "in times of trouble (at need)", ¹ that would be the more appropriate of the two options."
108	Friar. O, mistress, out it goes : Look what comes next, the friar throws.	106: Elinor should harbour no hope that the Friar will stick to canonical subjects. speed = succeed. = ie. "here it comes!"
110
112	[The Friar sits along and sings.]	109: another possible aside: the Friar bets everything on the next roll of the dice, meaning basically that he is going to come right out and try to seduce Elinor. = ie. alongside Elinor.
	Mort. [Aside] Such a sitting who ever saw?	113-4: Mortimer seems to be remarking on what an absurd

114	An eagle's bird of a jackdaw.	pair the Elinor and the Friar make, the first being like the offspring of an eagle, and the latter a lowly crow. eagle's bird = the expression was usually used to refer to an eagle's fledgling. jackdaw = a small crow, often used metaphorically to describe a talkative individual. ¹
116	Elinor. So, sir, is this all?
118	Mort. [Coming forward] Sweetheart, here's no more.
120	Elinor. How now, good fellow! more indeed by one than was before.	120: more indeed...before = "there is indeed one more person here now than there was a moment ago."
122	Friar. How now! the devil instead of a ditty!	122: "what's this? now we have a devil instead of a song!"
124	Mort. Friar, a ditty Come late from the city, To ask some pity Of this lass so pretty: – Some pity, sweet mistress, I pray you.	= recently.
126
128
130	Elinor. How now, Friar! where are we now, and you play not the man?	130: Elinor berates the Friar for failing to stand up to the intrusive peasant craftsman.
132	Friar. Friend copesmate , you that Came late from the city, To ask some pity Of this lass so pretty, In likeness of a doleful ditty, – Hang me if I do not pay ye.	= synonym for friend or partner. ¹
134
136
138
140	Mort. O, Friar, you grow choleric : well, you'll Have no man to court your mistress but yourself.	137: "may I hang if I do not punish or beat (pay) you now."
142
144	Friar. Ye talk, ye talk, child. [Mortimer and the Friar fight.]	139: choleric = ill-tempered. 139-140: you'll...yourself = ie. "I see you want no competition around to seduce this lady." = ie. "I'll humble you," a threatening expression; this interesting metaphor describes taking the Friar down a notch, by the length measurable from one button-hole, as on a jacket, to the next one down. The expression to take one a button-hole lower became proverbial.
146	Re-enter Lluellen and [Rice ap] Meredith.	143: "you are all talk, boy."
148	Lluel. 'Tis well, potter; you fight in a good quarrel.	145: Dodsley suggests that the pair go at it, Mortimer with his sword, and the Friar with his pike-staff; but it seems based on Lluellen's speech at lines 158-9 below that Mortimer may also have grabbed a stave that was lying around; if he is supposed to be disguised as a poor potter, it is not likely he would have a sword. 147: Lluellen will quickly realize that the two men are fighting over Elinor. 149: Lluellen is impressed with the potter's unexpected fighting skills (he of course does not realize that the potter is Mortimer, an experienced warrior). The two combatants have likely halted their brawl at the entrance of the Welsh nobles.

Mered. Mass, this blade will hold: let me see, then, Friar.

151: Meredith may be approvingly examining Mortimer's weapon, then asking to see the Friar's pike-staff.

The nature of Mortimer's weapon is uncertain (see the note at line 145 above); it is possible that by blade, Meredith means "staff", a definition appearing in the OED's entry for blade (def. 10b).

Mass = a common oath.

let me see, then = an old editor wonders if this should be changed to let me see thine, ie. the Friar's weapon, a reasonable proposal, given the Friar's response.

Friar. Mine's for mine own turn, I warrant: give him his tools. – Rise, and let's to it; – but no change, and if you love me. I scorn the odds, I can tell you: see fair play, an you be gentlemen.

153-4: Mine's for...tools = "I will use my own familiar weapon, I assure you; give the potter back his weapon." = if.

155: "I laugh in the face of the odds against me", ie. the Friar may be acknowledging the potter's superior fighting ability, or realizes his own lower odds in fighting against a man with a sword.

155-6: see fair...gentlemen = the Friar pleads with the lords to ensure the fight is a fair one.

an (line 156) = if.

Lluel. Marry, shall we, Friar. Let us see: be their staves of a length? Good: so, now 158-9: Lluellen assures the Friar that he and Meredith will act as impartial referees; one of the nobles grabs an available staff to give to Mortimer, and even looks to make sure their weapons are of equal length.

Let us deem of the matter,
Friar and potter,
Without more clatter;

= decide.

I have cast your water,

= talk, chatter.

163-8: Lluellen lets the Friar know that he knows that the Friar has been making moves on Elinor.

163: I have cast your water = a medical analogy, "I have examined you thoroughly"; to cast one's water is to study one's urine to determine the state of one's health.

And see as deep into your desire, as he that had dived every day into your bosom. O, Friar,

164-5: And see...bosom = "I can see into your heart as well as one who you share your secrets with on a daily basis."

= needs. = ie. women.

Will nothing serve your turn but larks?
Are such fine birds for such coarse clerks?
None but my Marian can serve your turn.

167: Elinor is a fine (ie. refined) bird, the Friar a coarse clerk (ie. cleric).

Elinor. Cast water, for the house will burn.

170: Elinor engages in some wordplay: she uses cast water to mean "throw water" on a fire.

Friar. O, mistress, mistress, flesh is frail;
'Ware when the sign is in the tail:
Mighty is love and doth prevail.

172-4: the Friar recalls Jack's prophetic words of Scene II.
71-73.

= beware.

Lluel. Therefore, Friar, shalt thou not fail,
But mightily your foe assail,

= attack.

178	And thrash this potter with thy flail : –	178: a flail is a specialized pole used for threshing corn, comprised of a wooden handle with a shorter, free-swinging club attached to its end. ¹ Lluellen thus puns, as thrash means both (1) beat (the modern sense), and (2) thresh. ¹
180	And, potter, never rave nor rail , Nor ask questions what I ail , But take this tool , and do not quail ,	= complain or rant. ¹ = ie. "regarding what ails me". = ie. the staff. = lose courage. ¹ 172-181: possibly the longest set of consecutive rhyming lines - nine lines worth - in all of Elizabethan drama.
182	But thrash this friar's russet coat ; And make him sing a dastard's note ,	= the habit worn by Franciscan monks could have a reddish hue. ³¹ = coward's song.
184	And cry, Peccavi miserere David In amo amavi. Go to.	184-5: Peccavi...amavi = 'I have sinned, have pity on David (ie. me), in that I have loved.' ³⁴ Go to = "begin the fight!"
186		[They take the flails.] 187: Lluellen provides the combatants with a new set of evenly-matched weapons. This stage-direction, which appears in the quartos, suggests Mortimer and the Friar are actually given these farm implements to use as weapons, as opposed to poles or staves.
188	Mort. Strike, strike.	189-192: the pair eye, and perhaps circle, each other warily.
190	Friar. Strike, potter, be thou lief or loth :	= willing or unwilling. ¹
192	An if you'll not strike, I'll strike for both.
194		[Mortimer strikes.]
196	Mort. He must needs go that the devil drives. Then, Friar, beware of other men's wives.	196: the man who is prodded by the devil has no choice but to move forward.
198	Friar. I wish, master proud potter, the devil have my soul.	= an ironic title. = arrogant.
200	But I'll make my flail circumscribe your noll .	= "draw a circle on your crown", a possible reference to the Friar's tonsure, and an obvious euphemism for "bash your head". ¹
202		[The Friar strikes.]
204	Luel. Why, so; now it cottens , now the game begins; One knave currieth another for his sins.	= goes right. ³ = beateth. ¹
206	Friar. [Kneeling]	207: having thrashed each other, the belligerents separate
208	O, master, shorten my offences in mine eyes !	208: the Friar seems to be asking Lluellen to stop the fight, and / or to forgive him for his attempted seduction of Elinor. shorten my offenses = perhaps, "curtail my sinful behaviour". mine = Dyce wonders if mine should be emended to thine , which would change the meaning of the line, perhaps for the better.
210	If this crucifige do not suffice, Send me to Heaven in a hempen sacrifice.	209-210: ie. if his being a Friar does not convince Lluellen to suspend the scuffle, then better to hang him. crucifige = call to crucify (him), ¹ ie. this forcing of the Friar to fight to his possible death; some editors emend

		crucifige to crucifix, so the meaning of line 209 becomes something like, "if the fact that I am wearing this crucifix, ie. I am a monk, cannot persuade you to suspend this battle".
212	Mort. [Kneeling]
214	O, masters, masters, let this be warning! The friar hath infected me with his learning .	214: the potter indirectly (and mildly humorously) claims he only began to act badly - referring either to fighting or making moves on Elinor - because the Friar started it. infected = corrupted. learning = instruction.
216	Lluel. Villains, do not touch the forbidden tree ,	216: Lluellen now strongly implies he believes both the Friar and potter were attempting to seduce his beloved. forbidden tree = the quartos print forbidden haire here, but the rhyme and context make the emendation to the common collation forbidden tree appropriate. The forbidden tree , of course, refers the tree of knowledge and evil whose fruit was off-limits to Adam and Eve.
218	Now to delude or to dishonour me.	= an old editor reasonably suggests emending Now to Nor .
220	Friar. O, master, quae negata sunt grata sunt .	219: Latin: "things that are denied are pleasing". ³⁴
222	Lluel. Rice, every day thus shall it be: We'll have a thrashing set among the friars; and he That of these challengers lays on slowest load ,	221-4: Lluellen plans to have the Friar and potter do battle every day. = ie. is more hesitant to fight. lays on load = common expression meaning "to attack vigorously". ⁴
224	Be thou at hand, Rice, to gore him with thy goad .	= ie. "prod him (to fight) with your sword." gore = bloody. goad = a rod with a pointed metal end, used to drive cattle and draught animals. ¹
226	Friar. Ah, potter, potter, the Friar may rue That ever this day this our quarrel he knew;	226-8: the Friar regrets fighting the potter, as his injuries remind him. = "my head is swollen". ³²
228	My pate addle , mine arms black and blue.	230: "who can avoid (eschew) his fate?" = have been well-instructed.
230	Mort. Ah, Friar, who may his fate's force eschew ? I think, Friar, you are prettily schooled .	= calmed, made less excitable; the Friar suggests that the potter received his share of injuries.
232	Friar. And I think the potter is handsomely cooled .
234	[Exeunt all except Mortimer.]
236	Mort. No, Mortimer; here 's that eternal fire That burns and flames with brands of hot desire: Why, Mortimer, why dost thou not discover Thyself her knight, her liegeman , and her lover?	= Mortimer presumably holds his hand to breast. = torches. = reveal. = vassal, subject.
242	[Exit.]

SCENE IX.

Berwick, on the border of Scotland and England.

Enter John Baliol, King of Scots, with his train, [including Lord Versses, and also French Lords.]

1 Bali. Lords of Albania, and my peers in France,
2 Since Baliol is invested in his rights,
3 And wears the royal Scottish diadem,
4 Time is to rouse him, that the world may wot
5 Scotland disdains to carry England's yoke.
6 Therefore, my friends, thus put in readiness,
7 Why slack we time to greet the English king
8 With resolute message, to let him know our minds? –

10 Lord Versses, though thy faith and oath be ta'en
11 To follow Baliol's arms for Scotland's right,
12 Yet is thy heart to England's honour knit:

12 Therefore, in spite of England and thyself,
13 Bear thou defiance proudly to thy king;
14 Tell him, Albania finds heart and hope
15 To shake off England's tyranny betime,
16 To rescue Scotland's honour with his sword. –

18 Lord Bruce, see cast about Versses' neck
19 A strangling halter, that he mind his haste. –
20 How say'st thou, Versses, wilt thou do this message?

22 Vers. Although no common post, yet, for my king,
23 I will to England, maugre England's might,
24 And do mine errand boldly, as becomes;

26 Albeit I honour English Edward's name,
27 And hold this slavish contemnment to scorn.

Scene IX: Now it is the turn of the Scottish to rebel against Edward and his overbearing handling of the northern kingdom. Unlike the Welsh, the Scots have a potential ally in the French, who have been in conflict with Edward since Edward received Gascony from Elinor's parents as a dowry. In 1295, Scotland in fact entered into a defensive alliance with France, requiring, should one of them be attacked by England, that the other attack England in return.

We may mention that after Baliol acknowledges the presence of the French in his court in line 1 of this scene, the French angle is never raised again.

Entering Characters: John Baliol, we remember, is the new king of Scotland.

Lord Versses seems to be an invention of Peele's. Neither Versses nor the French Lords are mentioned in the quartos' stage directions; both are added by the editor.

= old name for Scotland.⁶

= ie. as king.

= know.

= wear.

= ie. "now that we have made our preparations for war".

7-8: the Scottish king intends to send a set of demands to Edward.

9-11: though Versses has honourably pledged himself to serve Baliol faithfully, Baliol knows that deep in his heart, Versses maintains a strong emotional connection to England.

knit = tied.

= "in a show of spite to Edward, and despite your own feelings for England".

= ie. "carry a message of".

= at once.

= Dyce emends his to her - meaning Scotland.

17: Lord Bruce = this is Robert Bruce (1210-1295), grandfather of the famed Robert the Bruce, who would go on to be one of Scotland's greatest heroes and kings.

17-18: see cast...his haste = an unusual gesture: Versses will be required to travel to England and appear before Edward with what is basically a noose around his neck, as a warning to Versses that he is serving the Scottish king in this errand, and must therefore not delay in carrying it out.

= ie. "I am no ordinary messenger". = ie. Baliol.

= ie. go to. = notwithstanding.

= ie. "as is fitting (for one of my status or honour)."'

24-25: Versses will perform this task, even though he is partial to Edward, and disdains the humiliating manner in which Baliol is treating him.

contemnment = holding something in contempt.¹

Bali. Then hie away, as swift as swallow flies,
And meet me on our roads on England's ground;

We there think of thy message and thy haste.

[Sound trumpets. Exeunt.]

= hurry.

28: while Versses carries out his mission, the Scottish will begin an invasion across their southern border into England.

roads = inroads.³

29: Baliol sternly admonishes Versses to move with all speed.

We there think of = ie. "while I am there I will be thinking about"; but Dyce emends We there to Wither, and Bullen to 'Way there!', ie. "away there", meaning "be off!"

The Scottish Revolt of 1296: the relationship between Edward and Baliol began to deteriorate soon after the latter's crowning in 1292, when Edward insisted that he, as Baliol's overlord, had a right to hear appeals of the Scottish king's legal decisions. This position of course struck at the heart of Scotland's perceived sense of independence, and Baliol could not accede to Edward's demands to appear before him without bringing shame on his crown and on Scotland.

What was a king to do? Baliol at first refused to recognize this right of appeal, but when three of his English castles were seized as a penalty, Baliol relented, and attended Parliament when it met in London in 1294. Here he once again paid Edward homage, while the Scottish lords back home felt the humiliating sting of their king's abasement before England's monarch.

The response of the Scottish magnates was to establish a twelve-man council to rule Scotland, stripping Baliol of his power.

Matters escalated. At the next Scottish parliament held at Scone in 1295, the English lords were dismissed, and all fiefs held in Scotland by the English were forfeited. The Scottish then entered a defensive alliance with France; when Edward invaded Gascony in 1296, the Scottish, bound by the treaty, entered England in force, ravaging Cumberland and moving on Carlisle.⁹

The rebellion had begun. (see also Jones, pp. 280-5).

SCENE X.

Carnarvon Castle, Wales.

Enter King Edward, Edmund Duke of Lancaster, Gloucester, Sussex, Sir David, Cressingham, all booted from Northam.

The Queen's tent is present on the stage.

Entering Characters: satisfied with the birth of his new son, Edward, leaving Elinor at Castle Carnarvon, had returned to England to meet up with and escort his various Lords back to Carnarvon, where they all will be witnesses to the child's baptism.

Cressingham is a noble with a non-speaking part.

all booted = the king and Lords are wearing their riding boots to indicate that they have just moments ago arrived at Carnarvon.

Northam = the reference to Northam is in error; there is a Northam on the northern shore of Devonshire, England, but this makes no sense; Sugden suggests that Peele actually had Northampton, a large market-town 60 miles north-west of

- 1 K. Edw. Now have I leisure, lords, to bid you welcome
2 into Wales:
Welcome, sweet Edmund, to christen thy young nephew; –

4 And welcome, Cressingham; give me thy hand. –
But, Sussex, what became of Mortimer?
We have not seen the man this many a day.

6 Suss. Before your highness rid from hence to Northam,
8 Sir Roger was a suitor to your grace
Touching fair Elinor, Lluellen's love;

10 And so belike denied, with discontent
'A discontinues from your royal presence.

12 K. Edw. Why, Sussex, said we not for Elinor,
14 So she would leave whom she had loved too long,
She might have favour with my queen and me?

16 But, man, her mind above her fortune mounts,
And that's a cause she fails in her accounts. –

18 But go with me, my Lord of Lancaster;
20 We will go see my beauteous lovely queen,
That hath enriched me with a goodly boy.

22 The Queen's tent opens; she is discovered in her bed, attended by the Duchess of Lancaster, Joan of Acon, Mary (the Mayoress) and other attendants; the Queen dandles her young son. King Edward, Edmund, and Gloucester go into the Queen's chamber.

28 Ladies, by your leave. –

London, in mind here. Northam, however, may actually supposed to have read Norham, a castle on the border between Scotland and England; it was here that Baliol swore fealty to Edward on 20 November 1292, three days after Edward had announced his selection of Baliol as the legitimate King of Scotland.⁹ It is unlikely, of course, that Edward would have ridden to Scotland to collect his nobles.

= time.

2: according to the OED, the terms christening and baptism were generally interchangeable; a christening, however, was reserved for infants, since they would also receive a name at this time.

Edmund, we remember, is Edward's younger brother.

= from here.

8-9: Mortimer (Sir Roger) had been petitioning the king for permission to marry Elinor.

10-11: "it seems likely (belike) that since his request was essentially denied (seeing as Elinor had been traded to Lluellen to save David's life), Mortimer, unhappy, has abandoned your company."

'A = he.

13-15: though not completely clear, Edward seems to be claiming that he had indeed tried to persuade Elinor to forget about Lluellen (the one she had loved too long) so that she may regain her privileged status in English society.

16-17: however, Elinor dreams of a future (to wit, to be Lluellen's queen) beyond what fate has in store for her, and so she failed to take advantage of the opportunity offered by Edward.

Entering Characters: Queen Elinor is in child-bed, surrounded by her female attendants.

The Duchess of Lancaster is Edmund's wife, though her presence seems superfluous, as she neither speaks nor is even referred to. We met the Mayoress at the end of Scene III, when she upset the queen as she paraded noisily down the street. However, she does seem to have been taken on by Elinor as an attendant.

The stage directions in the quartos are a mass of confusion; Mary is identified as Edmund's wife, but he had no wife by that name; the Mayoress, however, does call herself Mary later in the play, so we have accepted Bullen's emendations of the stage directions, as shown.

= "with your permission;" Edward is graciously asking to

	How doth my Nell, mine own, my love, my life, My heart, my dear, my dove, my queen, my wife?	see his wife.
30
32	Qu. Elin. Ned, art thou come, sweet Ned? welcome, my joy! Thy Nell presents thee with a lovely boy: Kiss him, and christen him after thine own name . –	= ie. "name him after yourself."
34	Heigh-ho! Whom do I see? My Lord of Lancaster! Welcome heartily.
36
38	Lanc. I thank your grace: sweet Nell, well met withal .	= with.
40
42	Qu. Elin. Brother Edmund, here's a kinsman of yours: You must needs be acquainted.
44
46	Lanc. A goodly boy; God bless him! – Give me your hand, sir: You are welcome into Wales.	43-44: Edmund sticks a playful finger at the baby.
48
50	Qu. Elin. Brother, there's a fist, I warrant you, will hold a mace as fast as ever did father or grandfather before him.	= tightly. = ie. King Edward or his father Henry III.
52
54	K. Edw. But tell me now, lappèd in lily bands , How with the queen, my lovely boy it stands, After thy journey and these childbed pains?	= wrapped (lappèd) in white (lily) cloth. ¹ = Dyce reasonably emends the to my .
56
58	Qu. Elin. Sick, mine own Ned, thy Nell for thy company; That lured her with thy lies all so far, To follow thee unwieldy in thy war.	54: Dyce observes this line is corrupted, and hence unclear. thy Nell = later editions usually omit thy .
60
62
64	 But I forgive thee, Ned, my life's delight. So thy young son thou see be bravely dight , And in Carnarvon christened royally. Sweet love, let him be lapped most curiously :	55-56: the queen, we remember, had to figure out for herself why exactly Edward had sent for her to come to Wales when she was so advanced in her pregnancy; see Scene VI.93-95. unwieldy = weakly or awkwardly, due to her pregnancy. ¹
66
68
70	 He is thine own, as true as he is mine; Take order, then, that he be passing fine.	= the quartos print lims , emended by Dyce. = finely decked out. ²⁴
72
74	 K. Edw. My lovely lady, let that care be less : For my young son the country will I feast, And have him borne as bravely to the font As ever yet king's son to christening went. Lack thou no precious thing to comfort thee, Dearer than England's diadem unto me.	= wrapped. = handsomely. Elinor seems overly-concerned with how the baby is dressed, but there is a reason she is being presented so, as we shall shortly see.
76
78
80	 Qu. Elin. Thanks, gentle lord – Nurse, rock the	61-62: "because the baby is yours as much as he is mine, make sure he is dressed in the finest clothes." ⁷ passing = exceedingly.
82
84
86
88
90

72	cradle: fie ,	= "for shame", an exclamation of reproach.
74	The king so near, and hear the boy to cry! – Joan, take him up, and sing a lullaby.
76	K. Edw. 'Tis well, believe me, wench : – Godamercy , Joan!
78	Lanc. She learns, my lord, to lull a young one of her own.	= girl. = many thanks.
80	Qu. Elin. Give me some drink.	= soothe, pacify.
82	K. Edw. Drink nectar , my sweet Nell; Worthy for seat in Heaven with Jove to dwell.
84		= the drink of the gods.
86	Qu. Elin. Gramceries, Ned. Now, well remembered yet; I have a suit , sweet lord; but you must not deny it – Where's my Lord of Gloucester, good Clare, mine host, my guide? –	83: ie. "you who are worthy to sit in Heaven and to live with Jupiter, the king of the gods."
88	Good Ned, let Joan of Acon be his bride: Assure yourself that they are throughly wooed .	= request.
90		87: Clare is Gloucester's family name; he had been responsible, we remember, for escorting the queen and Joan on their journey to Wales.
92	Gloc. [Aside] God send the king be taken in the mood !
94	Lanc. Then, niece, 'tis like that you shall have a husband. –	= ie. in an agreeable or acceding mood.
96	K. Edw. Come hither, Gloucester: hold, give her thy hand; Take her, sole daughter to the Queen of England. –
98	[Edward gives Joan to Gloucester.]
100	For news he brought, Nell, of my young son, I promised him as much as I have done.	96: it is a futile exercise to try to tie a reality-based timeline into the play, but if we assume it is 1284 (the year of Edward II's birth), then Joan actually had several sisters alive in this year - one older (Eleanor) and three younger (Margaret, Mary and Isabella).
102
104	Glocester and Joan. [Hand in hand] We humbly thank your majesty.	100-1: once the baby was born, Gloucester had immediately ridden to inform the king.
106	Lanc. Much joy may them betide . A gallant bridegroom and a princely bride!
108		= "fall to them."
110	K. Edw. Now say, sweet queen, what doth my lady crave? Tell me what name shall this young Welshman have,
112	Born Prince of Wales by Cambria's full consent?	110: Edward asks Elinor what he should name the baby; but Elinor had already let the king know her preference in line 34 above.
114	Qu. Elin. Edward the name that doth me well content.	111: Edward reveals what Elinor and the audience already knew, which is that his son will fulfill the promise he made to the Welsh that their next prince will have been born in Wales; his little trick denies the locals of having a true Welshman for their sovereign.
116	K. Edw. Then Edward of Carnarvon shall he be, And Prince of Wales, christened in royalty.

118	Lanc. My lord, I think the queen would take a nap.
120	Joan. Nurse, take the child, and hold [it] in your lap.
122	K. Edw. Farewell, good Joan; be careful of my queen. – Sleep, Nell, the fairest swan mine eyes have seen.
124
126	[They close the tent. Exit Sussex.]
128	Lanc. I had forgot to ask your majesty How do you with the abbeys here in Wales?	129: How do you with = "what are you planning to do with". abbeys = this reference makes no sense; Hook emends abbeys to rebels ; Deighton prefers rabble .
130	K. Edw. As kings with rebels, Mun; our right prevails.	131: As kings with rebels = "I will deal with them the same way a king handles all rebels." Mun = Edward's nickname for Edmund.
132	We have good Robin Hood and Little John, The Friar and the good Maid Marian:	132-4: the English are aware that Lluellen and his party are camping out in the Welsh mountains.
134	Why, our Lluellen is a mighty man.
136	Gloc. Trust me, my lord, methinks ' were very good '	= it would be a good idea.
138	That some good fellows went and scoured the wood, And take in hand to cudgel Robin Hood.	= pummel.
	I think the Friar, for all his lusty looks,	= lusty can mean vigorous, but given the Friar's proclivities with the ladies, the lascivious sense of lusty may be meant.
140	Nor Robin's rabble with their glaives and hooks ,	140-1: "even with all their weapons, we could easily drive Lluellen and his men into hiding."
142	But would be quickly driven to the nooks.	Robin's rabble = the quartos print Robin rule here, emended by Dyce as shown, due to the reappearance of rabble later in the scene. glaives = appears as gleames in the quartos, emended by Dyce.
		glaives and hooks = pole-weapons: a glaive has a blade attached to its end, and a hook (also known as Welsh hook or Welsh bill) a curved blade and a spike. ¹
144	David. I can assure your highness what I know: The false Lluellen will not run nor go,
146	Or give an inch of ground, come man for man, Nor that proud rebel callèd Little John ,	= arrogant. = ie. Meredith.
	To him that wields the massiest sword of England.	144-7: semantically, line 146 seems better suited to follow line 144, and line 147 makes more sense following line 145; perhaps lines 145 and 146 should be transposed: The false Lluellen will not run nor go, Nor that proud rebel callèd Little John, Or give an inch of ground, come man for man, To him that wields the massiest sword of England.
148	Gloc. Welshman, how wilt thou that we understand?	To him (line 147) = ie. to Edward.
150	But for Lluellen, David, I deny ;	massiest (line 147) = weightiest.
	England hath men will make Lluellen fly ,	149-153: Gloucester is agitated by David's response. 149: a corrupt and unclear line. = ie. "I disagree with your assessment." = flee.

152	Maugre his beard, and hide him in a hole, Weary of England's dints and manly dole.	= "in spite of all he can do", a common expression. ¹
154		= because he will become exhausted from the many powerful blows (dints) ¹ that England can dish out.
156	Lanc. Gloucester, grow not so hot in England's right, That paints his honour out in every fight.	dole = dealings out (of blows). ¹
158	K. Edw. By Gis, fair lords, ere many days be past, England shall give this Robin Hood his breakfast. –	155-6: Edmund gently chides Gloucester for being too excitable when it comes to defending the king's prerogatives, and too quick to turn every disagreement into a question of England's honour.
160	David, be secret, friend, to that I say, And if I use thy skill, thou know'st the way Where this proud Robin and his yeomen roam.	158: by Gis = an oath: Gis is a "mincing pronunciation" of "Jesus", as the OED puts it.
162		ere many = before many more.
164	David. I do, my lord, and blindfold thither can I run.	159: an early commentator suggests omitting Hood from this line, noting that Edward is making a small joke here, ironically alluding to the bird robin .
166	K. Edw. David, enough: as I am a gentleman, I'll have one merry flirt with Little John, And Robin Hood, and his Maid Marian. Be thou my counsel and my company, And thou mayst England's resolution see.	thither = metaphor for "a good thrashing".
172	Enter Sussex.	160-2: Edward basically asks Sir David to lead him to Lluellen's hide-out.
174	Suss. May it please your majesty, here are four good squires of the cantreds where they do dwell, come in the name of the whole country to gratulate unto your highness all your good fortunes, and by me offer their most humble service to your young son, their prince, whom they most heartily beseech God to bless with long life and honour.	= to there.
176		166: practical joke, or smart rap or blow. ¹
178		169: Edward has a plan for himself and David alone.
180		= ie. Edward's.
182	K. Edw. Well said, Sussex, I pray, bid them come near.	Entering Character: Sussex enters to announce the arrival of a party of Welshmen.
184	[Exit Sussex.]	175: squires = men of a rank just below knight. ¹
186	Sir David, trust me, this is kindly done of your countrymen.	cantreds = hundreds, ie. geographical regions consisting of a hundred townships; an English adoption of an old Welsh term, cantref . ¹
188		= usually used to mean "well done".
190	David. [Aside] Villains, traitors to the ancient glory and renown of Cambria! Morris Vaughan, art thou there? And thou, proud Lord of Anglesey?	= by.
192	Re-enter Sussex with the four Barons of Wales, with a mantle of frieze. The Barons kneel.	190-1: David recognizes some of the entering Welshmen.
194		= blanket made of a coarse woolen cloth. ^{1,2}
196	1st Baron. The poor country of Cambria, by us unworthy messengers, gratulates to your majesty the

198	birth of your young son, Prince of Wales, and in this poor present express their most zealous duty and affection, which with all humbleness we present to your highness' sweet and sacred hands.	199: present = gift. present express = the quartos print prest exprest , emended by Dyce.
200		= ie. the Welsh people's; country could be used to refer to the people of a region. ¹
202		= ie. to young Edward's christening.
204	K. Edw. Gramercies, barons, for your gifts and good-wills: by this means my boy shall wear a mantle of country's weaving to keep him warm, and live for
206	England's honour and Cambria's good. I shall not need, I trust, courteously to invite you ; I doubt not, lords, but you will be all in readiness to wait on your young prince, and do him honour at his christening.
210		= mounted on their finest horses.
212	Suss. The whole country of Cambria round about, all well-horsed and attended on, both men and women in their best array, are come down to do service of love and honour to our late-born prince, your majesty's son
214	and honey : the men and women of S[n]owdon	= recently-born.
216	especially have sent in great abundance of cattle and corn, enough by computation for your highness' household a whole month and more.	215: honey = an early commentator, sensing an error in typography, suggested changing honey to heir , and / or moving and honey to after corn in line 217. ⁴ Snowdon = a mountain range within modern Carnarvonshire.
218		= ie. "by my calculation".
220	K. Edw. We thank them all; and will present our queen with these courtesies and presents bestowed on her young son, and greatly account you for our friends.
222
224	[Exit Four Barons.]	John de Warenne, Earl of Surrey: our Earl of Sussex was never really the Earl of Sussex. Born around 1231 A.D., de Warenne succeeded to his father's title of Earl of Surrey at the latter's death in 1240. In 1247 John married Henry's half-sister Alice of Lusignan. He sided with Simon de Montfort early in the Barons' War, but by the time of Lewes he was steadfastly on the royalist side. Upon Henry and Edward's defeat at Lewes, de Warenne fled to France, an action for which he was criticized by later chroniclers. He returned after a year in exile, in time to fight at Evesham, and went on to serve Edward loyally and rigorously for the rest of his life.
		John de Warenne fought actively and mostly successfully in Edward's Welsh and Scottish campaigns, the only blot on his record occurring when he mismanaged the English forces that were wiped out by the famed Scottish rebel William Wallace on 11 September 1297 at Stirling Bridge. In 1282, he seems to have adopted the title of Earl of Sussex on the death of the current Earl, but it is unclear whether de Warenne had ever been legally recognized as possessing that earldom.
		The old warrior finally died in 1304, and his remains were buried at Lewes.⁹
226	[The Queen's tent opens; the King, his brother and the Earl of Gloucester enter.]
228

	Qu. Elin. Who talketh there?
230	K. Edw. A friend, madam.
232	Joan. Madam, it is the king.
234	Elinor. Welcome, my lord. Heigh-ho, what have we there?
236	K. Edw. Madam, the country, in all kindness and duty, recommend their service and good-will to your son; and, in token of their pure good-will, presents him by us with a mantle of frieze, richly lined to keep him warm.	= ie. Welsh. = offer. = ie. "through me".
242	Elinor. A mantle of frieze! fie, fie! for God's sake, let me hear no more of it, an if you love me. Fie, my lord! is this the wisdom and kindness of the country? Now I commend me to them all, and if Wales have no more wit or manners than to clothe a king's son in frieze, I have a mantle in store for my boy that shall, I trow, make him shine like the sun, and perfume the streets where he comes.	= if. = expect.
250		243-250: Elinor is too proud to let the young prince be wrapped in such inferior material as the mantle is made of; she does not understand, as Edward explains, the political necessity of appearing grateful for the gift.
252	K. Edw. In good time, madam, he is your own, lap him as you list: but I promise thee, Nell, I would not for ten thousand pounds the country should take unkindness at thy words.	= ie. "you can do with him as you wish". = clothe. = desire. = Welsh people.
256	Elinor. 'Tis no marvel, sure; you have been royally received at their hands.	= wonder. = "I'm sure" or "doubtless"; Elinor is sarcastic.
258	No, Ned, but that thy Nell doth want her will,	= "if it wasn't for the fact that my wishes cannot be fulfilled".
260	Her boy should glisten like the summer's sun, In robes as rich as Jove when he triumphs.	= glisten.
262	His pap should be of precious nectar made,	= semi-liquid food for infants. ¹ = drink of the gods.
264	His food ambrosia – no earthly woman's milk; Sweet fires of cinnamon to open him by;	= food of the gods. = ie. "mere mortal". = ie. example of a pleasant scent. = expose, ie. warm.
	The Graces on his cradle should attend;	= three minor sister goddesses, representing "grace, charm, and beauty" (Roman, p. 180). ³³ The ladies often were portrayed as attending the major gods. ³³
266	Venus should make his bed and wait on him, And Phoebus' daughter sing him still asleep.	= the goddess of beauty.
268	Thus would I have my boy used as divine, Because he is King Edward's son and mine:	= Apollo, or Phoebus, has no known daughters. ⁷
270	And do you mean to make him up in frieze?	= treated.
	For God's sake lay it up charily and perfume it against winter; it will make him a goodly warm Christmas coat.	= "dress him up". ¹
272		271-2: lay it up...winter = "store it away (lay it up) carefully (charily) until we need it again next winter." charily = likely meant to be sarcastic. perfume it = Elinor may mean simply to store the mantle with pleasant-smelling spices to help prevent it from developing an offensive odour, but her tone hints at some further denigration of the mantle's inferior quality. ¹

274	K. Edw. Ah, Mun , my brother, dearer than my life, How this proud humour slays my heart with grief! –	= ie. Edmund. = "arrogant temperament"; the quartos print proude honor , emended by Dyce.
276	Sweet queen, how much I pity the effects !	= "lament the consequences (of your hubris)"; Dyce suggests the end of the line does not ring true, and that some language dropped out.
278	This Spanish pride ' grees not with England's prince ; Mild is the mind where honour builds his bower ,	= does not go with or agree with. = king. 278: true honour thrives in one whose temperament is mild. his bower = its home.
	And yet is earthly honour but a flower .	279: but the type of honour one seeks from possessing admirers and showy belongings only lasts as long as our existence on earth - that is, only briefly, like a flower .
280	Fast to those looks are all my fancies tied, Pleased with thy sweetness, angry with thy pride.	280: "my emotions are bound tightly to the way you look at me".
282
284	Qu. Elin. Fie, fie! methinks I am not where I should be; Or at the least I am not where I would be.	= desire to.
286	K. Edw. What wants my queen to pérfect her content? But ask and have, the king will not repent.	= lacks.
288
290	Qu. Elin. Thanks, gentle Edward. – Lords, have at you , then! Have at you all, long-bearded Englishmen !	= "begone!"
292	Have at you, lords and ladies! when I crave To give your English pride a Spanish brave .	= as we will shortly see, Elinor has a special beef with the hirsute English.
294	K. Edw. What means my queen?	= act of defiance.
296	Gloc. [Aside] This is a Spanish fit.
298	Qu. Elin. Ned, thou hast granted, and canst not revoke it.	298: ie. "you promised you will give me anything I asked for."
300	K. Edw. Sweet queen, say on: my word shall be my deed.
302	Qu. Elin. Then shall my words make many a bosom bleed. Read, Ned, thy queen's request lapt up in rhyme,	= enclosed or wrapped up. ¹
304	And say thy Nell had skill to choose her time.
306	[Queen Elinor gives King Edward a paper.]
308	K. Edw. [Reads] "The pride of Englishmen's long hair Is more than England's Queen can bear: Women's right breast, cut them off all;
310	And let the great tree perish with the small."
312	What means my lovely Elinor by this?
314	Qu. Elin. Not [to] be denied, for my request it is.

316	Lanc. Gloucester, an old said saying, – He that grants all is asked, Is much harder than Hercules tasked.	= frequently quoted or spoken. ¹
318		317: allusion to the 12 labours of Hercules, a series of near-impossible tasks imposed on the Greek hero as penance for his involuntary killing his wife and son.
320	Gloc. [Aside] Were the king so mad as the queen is wood , Here were an end of England's good.	= ie. out of her mind. ¹
322		321: "this would be the end of England's prosperity."
324	K. Edw. My word is passed , – I am well agreed; Let men's beards milt and women's bosoms bleed –	= ie. Edward will not go back on his word.
326	Call forth my barbers! Lords, we'll first begin . –	= Dyce suggests emending to moult , Hook to melt; milt , as Dyce observes, is not the right word here: milt at this time was used as a noun only, and referred to the spleen of an animal, or the testes or semen of a fish. ¹
	Enter two Barbers.	= "I will be the first one to remove my beard."
328	Come, sirrah , cut me close unto the chin,	= appropriate form of address to an inferior. = shave.
330	And round me even , see'st thou, by a dish ;	= crop or cut close Edward's hair. = uncertain reference.
332	Leave not a lock: my queen shall have her wish.
334	Qu. Elin. What, Ned, those locks that ever pleased thy Nell,	= Edward's curly grey hairs; the king was 43 when baby Edward was born.
336	Where her desire, where her delight doth dwell! Wilt thou deface that silver labyrinth ,	= brilliant. ² = the quartos print pimpilde , emended by Dyce; purple hyacinth was a common collocation.
338	More orient than purpled hyacinth?	337-8: Elinor means that her instructions should be visited on everyone but her husband.
	Sweet Ned, thy sacred person ought not droop ,	droop = bend or sink down, ¹ ie. assent to such degrading treatment.
	Though my command make other gallants stoop .	stoop = bend over in a show of obeisance. ¹
340	K. Edw. Madam, pardon me and pardon all; No justice but the great runs with the small. –	341: the rules must be applied equally to the greatest and least of men.
342	Tell me, good Gloucester, art thou not afear'd?
344	Gloc. No, my lord, but resolved to lose my beard.
346	K. Edw. Now, madam, if you purpose to proceed To make so many guiltless ladies bleed,	= innocent.
348	Here must the law begin, sweet Elinor, at thy breast, And stretch itself with violence to the rest.
350	Else princes ought no other do, Fair lady, than they would be done unto.	= kings.
352	Qu. Elin. What logic call you this? Doth Edward mock his love?
354	K. Edw. No, Nell; he doth as best in honour doth behove,	355: "I am behaving in a manner consistent with the demands of honour".
356	And prays thee, gentle queen, – and let my prayers move , –	356: prays = asks. move = "persuade (you)".

	Leave these ungentle thoughts, put on a milder mind;	= cease (thinking). = ignoble. = ie. wear.
358	Sweet looks, not lofty, civil mood becomes a woman's kind :	358: lofty, civil mood = a haughty, overly-serious temperament. ¹ becomes = suits. kind = nature.
360	And live, as, being dead and buried in the ground, Thou mayst for affability and honour be renowned.	359-360: "and conduct yourself in life in such a way that when you are dead and gone, your reputation for geniality and nobility of spirit will survive you."
362	Qu. Elin. Nay, an you preach, I pray, my lord, be gone: The child will cry and trouble you anon .	= if. = ie. any moment.
364
366	[The Nurse closeth the tent.]	365: Elinor's Lady attendants and the Mayoress remain outside the tent.
368	Mayoress. [Aside] Quo semel est imbuta recens servabit odorem Testa diu.	368-9: "A jar will long retain the odour of what it was dipped in when new": from Horace's Epistles I.ii.69-70. ³⁵ The Mayoress means that the queen's arrogant personality was formed during her upbringing as a princess in the Spanish court.
370	Proud incest in the cradle of disdain, Bred up in court of pride , brought up in Spain,	In the quartos, the Latin citation floats in the space between the stage direction of line 365 and the Mayoress' speech. We accept Dyce's assigning it to the Mayoress.
372	Dost thou command him coyly from thy sight, That is thy star, the glory of thy light?	370-1: the Mayoress addresses the absent Elinor as incest (here a vocative term), but it is unclear if this is the right word - Elinor's parents are the unrelated King Ferdinand III of Castile and his second wife, Joan, Countess of Ponthieu.
374		Perhaps we are to understand Elinor to be the offspring of the related qualities of disdain and pride .
376	K. Edw. O, could I with the riches of my crown Buy better thoughts for my renomèd Nell, Thy mind, sweet queen, should be as beautiful	Bullen, unhappy with incest , emends it to infect .
378	As is thy face, as is thy features all, Fraught with pure honour's treasure, and enriched	Bred up = raised, with consideration to being trained to a certain manner of attitude and education. ¹
380	With virtues and glory incomparable. – Ladies about her majesty, see that the queen your	pride = arrogance.
382	mistress know not so much; but at any hand our
384	pleasure is that our young son be in this mantle borne to his christening, for special reasons is thereto	372: "do you actually dare order Edward haughtily from your presence". = "he who".
386	moving; from the church, as best it please your women's wits to devise.	= emended by Dyce to are . = loaded.
		381: Ladies = vocative, ie. "you ladies".
		381-2: see that...so much = ie. "don't repeat to her what I am about to tell you."
		= wish, a euphemism for "command". = the one of frieze.
		384-5: for special...moving = ie. "because I have an important reason for wanting this done."
		385-6: from the...devise = "but after the christening, the baby may be carried away from the church dressed any way you desire." wits = cleverness.

388	[Exeunt Mayoress and Ladies into the tent.]
390	Yet, sweet Joan, see this faithfully performed; and, hear you, daughter, look you be not last up when this day comes, lest Gloucester find another bride in your stead. – David, go with me.	391-3: hear you...stead = Edward affectionately, gently and teasingly reminds Joan, in Gloucester's presence, not to let him get away from her.
392
394	[Exit King Edward with Sir David.]	395: Edward and David will reappear together in the next scene.
396
398	Gloc. She riseth early, Joan, that beguileth thee of a Gloucester.	397-8: "a woman would have to get up pretty early in the morning to cheat or trick you out of possessing me!" An early version of a still common expression.
400	Lanc. Believe him not, sweet niece: women can speak smooth for advantage.	400-1: women...advantage = ie. "women are able to flatter any time they want to in order to get what they want", ie. "women actually don't have to get up early if they want to steal Gloucester from you."
402
404	Joan. "We men", do you mean, my good uncle? Well, be the accent where it will, women are women. – I will believe you for as great a matter as this comes to, my lord.	403-4: Joan responds with a witty pun: "don't you mean we men can flatter to get what they want?" Her jest involves moving the stress from wo- in Edmund's WO-men to men in we MEN .
406
408	Gloc. Gramercies, sweet lady, et habebis fidei mercedem contrà .	408-9: Latin: "and in return you will be paid for your faith." ³⁴
410
412	[The Queen's tent is closed.]
	[Exeunt.]
		Edmund, Duke of Lancaster: six years the junior of his brother the king, Edmund (1245-1296) remained a loyal member of the royal family for his entire life. At the age of ten, he tentatively became the King of Sicily as part of one of Henry's poorly-conceived schemes (see Prelude I in the notes at the top of the play), but Edmund played no role of his own in this fiasco. Edmund lived in France with his mother during the years of the Barons' War, but returned after the decisive Battle of Evesham to assist Henry and Edward in the post-war mopping up operations. In 1270, he married the fabulously wealthy Aveline de Fortibus, daughter of William, Earl of Albemarle. Edmund joined Edward in Palestine as a Crusader in the spring of 1271, where, according to the National Biography, he was "said to have accomplished little or nothing". His wife dying in 1273, Edmund married a second time in 1275, taking as his wife Blanche, daughter of Robert I, Count of Artois. Edmund played an active role in prosecuting the Welsh wars, and he was in command with Edmund Mortimer (the son of our play's Mortimer) at the rout in which Lluellen was slain in 1282. Edmund's final duty was to take command of the English forces in France during the wars of the 1290's. Failing to accomplish anything, he died in Bayonne on 6 June 1296. A religious man with a pleasant personality, Edmund was a SCENE XI.

Carnorvan Castle, Wales.

Enter [Jack] the Novice and his company to give the Queen music at her tent.

1 Jack. Come, fellows, cast yourselves even round in a
2 string – a ring I would say: come merrily on my word,

4 for the queen is most liberal, and if you will please her well, she will pay you royally: so, lawful to brave well thy British lustily to solace our good queen: God save

6 her grace, and give our young prince a carpell in their

8 kind! – Come on, come on, set your crowds, and beat your heads together, and behave you handsomely.

10 [Here they play and sing, and then exeunt.]

SCENE XII.

Mannock-den, Wales.

Enter the Friar.

1 Friar. I have a budget in my nose this gay morning, popular member of the royal family. We was buried in Westminster.⁹

Scene XI: the scene basically functions as a musical interlude for the audience.

1-2: cast...would say = Jack instructs his group to make a circle for dancing; having first "mistakenly" saying string, he corrects himself to ring. The OED says that string was commonly and humorously used to refer to a hangman's rope (def. 1a).

= generous.

4: pay = ie. material reward.

4-5: so, lawful...queen = the editors have struggled to make sense of this clause. Dyce, in despair, announces he can make nothing out of any of this, all the way to carpell in their kind. The general point seems to be that Jack is encouraging his companions to give their all to entertain the queen.

Deighton proposes a daring emendation: "Sol, la, mi, fa! to't! raise your British voices lustily, etc." He even suggests there is a pun with solace here! Hook proposes changing brave to brawl (a word used earlier in the play at Scene VIII.95), meaning "sing lustily".

6: carpell = carpell has its own entry, but left without definition, in the OED. Deighton suggests carpell is a misprint for carrell, an alternate spelling for carol.

6-7: in their kind = as befits such personages.⁴²

7-8: Come on...handsomely = Jack addresses the musicians of his retinue who have brought their own instruments on stage with them.

set your crowds = "tune your fiddles"; crowd, from the Welsh word crwth, refers to an ancient Celtic stringed instrument, played with a bow, and eventually came to be used to mean a fiddle.¹

heads = drums.¹

1: "I have the scent of a wallet (budget) in my nose this fine morning."⁷ The Friar has an itch to cheat someone out of some money this day.

2 and now will I try how clerkly the friar can behave himself. 'Tis a common fashion to get gold with

4 "Stand: deliver your purses!" Friar Davy will once in his days get money by wit. There is a rich farmer

6 should pass this ways to receive a round sum of 8 money: if he come to me, the money is mine, and the 10 law shall take no vantage; I will cut off the law as the hangman would cut a man down when he hath shaken 12 his heels half-an-hour under the gallows. Well, I must take some pains for this gold; and have at it!

14 [The Friar spreads the lappet of his gown, and falls to dice.]

16 Enter a Farmer.

18 Farmer. 'Tis an old said saying, I remember I read it 20 in Cato's Pueriles that Cantabit vacuus coram latrone viator; a man purse-penniless may sing before a thief:

22 true, as I have not one penny, which makes me so pertly pass through these thickets. But indeed I [am to] receive a hundred marks; and all the care is how I shall 24 pass again. Well, I [am] resolved either to ride twenty 26 miles about, or else to be so well accompanied that I will not care for these rufflers.

in my nose = expression used in connection with smelling something.

= test. = cleverly.²

3-4: 'Tis a...purses = the normal way for people to acquire gold is to rob others on the highway.

= a very early reference to what appears to have already been the quintessentially English highwayman's command, "stand and deliver!"

4-5: Friar Davy...by wit = the Friar will try to trick someone out of his money, rather than outright rob him.

= "who is on his way to collect".

= ie. "stops and talks to me".

= the sense is, "shall not be able to take its course against me", ie. the law will have no say.

= "make an effort for", ie. "work for". = "let's have a go!"

= loose flap or fold.¹

= ie. playing dice.

Entering Character: the Friar's expected victim arrives.

18-20: the Farmer is surprisingly well-educated if he can read Latin; in the Elizabethan era, if a lad was fortunate enough to attend school, his education would be comprised primarily of studying Latin texts (Taylor, p. 32).⁴⁴

The Farmer remembers the quote properly: "a man who is without a penny in his purse can sing before the robber"⁴⁴ - because he or she has nothing to lose; but in what Hook calls a "little joke", or inside joke, by Peele, the Farmer is mistaken as to the source of the quote.

The following explanation is all from Hook (p. 195): those who attended school in late-16th century England would be familiar with three collections of aphorisms and wisdom: (1) the Distichs of Cato, or Disticha Moralia, by the otherwise unknown Dionysius Cato; (2) Sententiae Pueriles, collected by the Leonhard Culmann; and (3) William Lily's Short Introduction to Grammar. The Farmer not only mixes up who wrote the Pueriles, but also forgets that the quoted proverb came from Lily's work.

The quote's original source was Juvenal's Satire X.

= briskly,¹ but perhaps also a sense of daringly, brazenly.

23-24: all the care...again = "my only worry (care) is how I shall safely pass through this way again on my return journey."

24-26: I am resolved...rufflers = "(to protect myself once I have my 100 marks) I am determined to either take a horse and ride the long way around - an extra 20 miles of travelling - or travel as part of a large enough group so that I shall not have to worry about any rogues."

rufflers = the OED defines a ruffler as a vagabond who made a living by impersonating a maimed soldier or sailor.

28	Friar. Did ever man play with such uncircumcised hands? size-ace to eleven and lose the chance!	28-29: the Friar cries out in great feigned frustration or anger, pretending to have bad luck at the dice. uncircumcised = heathen, not spiritually pure; ¹ the Friar modifies the usual expression, uncircumcised hearts . size-ace = a throw of six and one on a pair of dice. ¹
30		= "God grant you success!" = ie. ragest.
32	Farmer. God speed, good fellow! why chafest thou so fast? there's nobody will win thy money from thee.	32: fast = strongly, vigorously. ¹ there's...from thee = since the Friar is playing by himself, it's not as if he is losing his money to another person.
34	Friar. Sounds, you offer me injury, sir, to speak in my cast.	34-35: ie. "damn it, you do me wrong - ie. it is bad luck - for you to speak to me as I am throwing."
36		Sounds = ie. zounds, the quintessential Elizabethan oath, an abbreviation of God's wounds , a common swear referring to the wounds of Christ.
38	Farmer. [Aside] The Friar undoubtedly is lunatic – I pray thee, good fellow, leave chafing, and get some warm drink to comfort thy brains.	37: Dyce marks the first line of this speech as an aside, but the Friar clearly hears this remark. = "stop your raving".
40		= ie. "it would be better if I was (lunatic)".
42	Friar. Alas, sir, I am not lunatic: 'tis not so well, for I have lost my money, which is far worse. I have lost five gold nobles to Saint Francis; and if I knew where	43: gold nobles = English coins worth 6 shillings 8 pence, but not minted until the reign of Edward III! ¹ Saint Francis = the Friar reveals himself to be a member of the Franciscan order. = collector. = right now.
44	to meet with his receiver, I would pay him presently.
46	Farmer. Wouldst thou speak with Saint Francis' receiver?
48	Friar. O Lord, ay, sir, full gladly.
50
52	Farmer. Why, man, I am Saint Francis' receiver, if you would have anything with him.	= ie. "any business with him."
54	Friar. Are you Saint Francis' receiver? Jesus, Jesus! are you Saint Francis' receiver? and how does all?	= "how is everything with Francis?"
56
58	Farmer. I am his receiver, and am now going to him: 'a bids Saint Thomas a' Waterings to breakfast this morning to a calf's-head and bacon.	57-59: the Farmer, assuming the Friar is insane, expects the cleric to believe his nonsense: he uses a well-known place name - Saint Thomas a' Waterings - as if it were the name of a real person! 'a = he. Saint Thomas a' Waterings = a watering place for horses on the road from London to Canterbury, named so because the location was a stopping-place for Pilgrims travelling to see the shrine of Thomas Becket at Canterbury. It was also the place of executions for the county of Surrey up to the mid-18th century. ^{6,7}
60
62	Friar. Good Lord, sir, I beseech you carry him these five nobles, and tell him I deal honestly with him as if he were here present.	= beg, entreat.

64		[Gives money.]
66	Farmer.	I will of my word and honesty, Friar; and so farewell.	= by.
68
70	Friar.	Farewell, Saint Francis' receiver, even heartily.
72		[Exit Farmer.]
74		Well, now the Friar is out of cash five nobles, God knows how he shall come into cash again: but I must to it again. There's nine for your holiness and six for me.	75-76: I must to it again = "I must return to my gaming." = ie. St. Francis.
76
78
80		Enter Lluellen, Rice ap Meredith and Mortimer, disguised as a Potter, with their Prisoners.	79-80: the Welsh noble party returns from another excursion; like Robin Hood, they have turned to banditry, capturing a number of passers-by.
82	Lluel.	Come on, my hearts : bring forth your prisoners, and let us see what store of fish is there in their purse-	= dear ones. = supply of fish, referring to the money in the travellers' pouches; fish is used metaphorically with purse-nets , which are nets used to hold fish or small game. ⁷
84		nets. – Friar, why chafest thou, man? here's nobody will offer thee any foul play , I warrant thee .	= "harm you" or "rob you". = assure.
86
88	Friar.	O, good master, give me leave : my hand is in a little; I trust I shall recover my losses.	87: give me leave = "please let me keep playing." 87-88: my hand...losses = "I am losing money, but I trust I can win it all back."
90	Lluel.	The Friar is mad; but let him alone with his device. – And now to you, my masters, Pedler, Priest,	90-91: let him alone...device = the sense is that the Friar may be left alone to pursue whatever game or trick he has up his sleeve.
92
94		and Piper: throw down your budgets in the mean while, and when the Friar is at leisure he shall tell you what you shall trust to .	= wallets. = ie. instruct. = ie. be required to do.
96	Pedler.	Alas, Sir, I have but three pence in the corner of my shoe.
98
100	Mered.	Never a shoulder of mutton, Piper, in your tabor ? – But soft! here comes company.	= small drum. = "hold on!"
102		Enter King Edward Longshanks, Sir David, Farmer.	Entering Characters: the king has followed through on his idea from Scene X.160-2 to have Sir David lead him to Lluellen. The pair have disguised themselves as common travellers. Notice that Lluellen fails to recognize either his brother or the king, despite the latter's distinctive great height. It was a convention of Elizabethan drama that characters' disguises were generally impenetrable to others on the stage, even if they were obvious to the audience.
			Note also the use here of the stage device known as Compression of Time ; in the brief passing of just 28 lines since the Farmer left the Friar (line 72), the Farmer has already completed his out-bound journey and collected his money from his debtor, met up with and joined Edward for the return trip, and made it back to the same location in the mountains to where he had originally fleeced the Friar.

104	Farmer. Alas, gentlemen, if you love yourselves , do not venture through this mountain: here's such a coil	= common formula for "if you want to avoid harm".
106	with Robin Hood and his rabble, that every cross in my purse trembles for fear.	= stir, uproar. = a coin with a cross stamped on one side.
108
110	K. Edw. Honest man, as I said to thee before, conduct us through this wood, and if thou beest robbed or have any violence offered thee, as I am a gentleman, I will repay it thee again.
112
114	David. How much money hast thou about thee?	= be'est, ie. are,
116	Farmer. Faith, sir, a hundred marks; I received it even now at Brecknock. But, out alas , we are undone !
118	yonder is Robin Hood and all the strong thieves in the mountain. I have no hope left but your honour's assurance.	= exclamation of regret. ² = ruined, ie. done for.
120
122	K. Edw. Fear not; I will be my word's master .
124	Friar. Good master, an if you love the Friar,
126	Give aim a while, I you desire,
128	And as you like of my device , So love him that holds the dice.	= "direct" (referring to the dice), an archery expression, meaning "stand near the target and mark where the arrows land". ^{3,4}
130	Farmer. What, Friar, art thou still labouring so hard? Will you have anything more to Saint Francis?	= "are pleased by what I am doing".
132	Friar. Good Lord, are you here, sweet Saint Francis' receiver? How doth his holiness , and all his good family?	= ie. the Friar himself.
134
136	Farmer. In good health, faith, Friar: hast thou any nobles for him?
138
140	Friar. You know the dice are not partial : an Saint Francis were ten saints, they will favour him no more than they would favour the devil, if he play at dice. In very truth, my friend, they have favoured the Friar, and I have won a hundred marks of Saint Francis. Come, sir; I pray, sirrah, draw it over: I know, sirrah, he is a good man, and never deceives none.	= "is St. Francis doing".
142
144
146	Farmer. Draw it over! what meanest thou by that?	= English gold coins; the Friar, we remember, had earlier given the Farmer five nobles to deliver to St. Francis.
148
150	Friar. Why, in numeratis pecuniis legem pone ; pay me my winnings.	= not biased. = if.
152	Farmer. What ass is this! should I pay thee thy winnings?	= ie. the dice. = from. = hand, turn.
154
		149: Latin: "pony up in ready cash". ³⁴
		= ie. "an ass". ³

	Friar. Why, art not thou, sirrah , Saint Francis' receiver?	= term of address, sometimes expressing contempt, as perhaps here.
156
158	Farmer. Indeed, I do receive for Saint Francis.
160	Friar. Then I'll make you pay for Saint Francis, that's flat.	161: the Friar likely puts his hands on the Farmer at this point, trying to take the Farmer's 100 nobles off of him.
162
164	Farmer. Help, help! I am robbed, I am robbed!
166
	[Bustling on both sides.]
168	K. Edw. Villain, you wrong the man: hands off!	167: although not completely clear, Edward is likely addressing the Friar here.
170
172	Friar. Masters, I beseech you, leave this brawling, and give me leave to speak. So it is, I went to dice with Saint Francis, and lost five nobles: by good fortune his cashier came by, [and] received it of me in ready cash.	= cease.
174	I, being very desirous to try my fortune further, played still; and as the dice, not being bound prentice to him or any man, favoured me, I drew a hand and won a hundred marks. Now I refer it to your judgments, whether the Friar is to seek his winnings.	= permission, ie. a chance.
176
178	K. Edw. Marry, Friar, the farmer must and shall pay thee honestly ere he pass .	= from.
180		= test. = luck.
182	Farmer. Shall I, sir? Why, will you be content to pay half as you promised me?	174-5: not being...to = not bound in apprenticeship to, ie. not favouring.
184
186	K. Edw. Ay, farmer, if you had been robbed of it; but if you be a gamester , I'll take no charge of you , I.	= ie. collect.
188	Farmer. Alas, I am undone !
190		= ie. "before we allow him to travel any further."
	[Farmer gives money and exit.]	182-3: actually, Edward had promised to pay off the full amount; see lines 109-112 above. ⁴
192	Lluel. So, Sir Friar, now you have gathered up your winnings, I pray you stand up and give the passengers
		= gambler. = ie. "responsibility for your debts."
194	their charge , that Robin Hood may receive his toll.	= ruined.
196	Friar. And shall, my lord. Our thrice-renowmed Lluellen, Prince of Wales and Robin Hood of the great mountain, doth will and command all passengers, at the sight of Richard , servant unto me Friar David ap Tuck, to lay down their weapons, and quietly to yield,	124-190: this little episode with the Farmer further cements both the Friar's reputation for being a sinful man - a comically bad Catholic - and Edward's Solomon-like wisdom.
198		190: Stage direction added by Dyce.
200
	for custom towards the maintenance of his highness' wars, the half of all such gold, silver, money, and	= travellers; the quartos, we note, print messengers here, properly emended by Dyce; the same error occurred with passenger in line 203 below.
202
		= instructions, duties.
		= ultra-famous or celebrated.
		= common formula meaning "order".
		199: Richard = the Friar's pike-staff.
		199-200: Friar David ap Tuck = note the parodic hybrid name the Friar has assumed.
		= a tax or duty.

	204 money-worth, as the said passenger hath then about him; but if he conceal any part or parcel of the same, then shall he forfeit all that he posseseth at that 206 present. And this sentence is irrevocable, confirmed by our lord Lluellen Prince of Wales and Robin Hood of 208 the great mountain.	= ie. possessions of monetary value. ¹
210	Lluel. So vail your budgets to Robin of the mountain. – But what art thou that disdainest to pay this custom, 212 as if thou scornest the greatness of the Prince of Wales?	= "lower" or "surrender". ^{1,3} = wallets. = who.
214	K. Edw. Faith, Robin, thou seemest to be a good 216 fellow: there's my bag; half is mine, and half is thine. But let's to it, if thou darest, man for man, to try who 218 shall have the whole.	217-8: Edward challenges Lluellen to single-combat, winner take all.
220	Lluel. Why, thou speakest as thou shouldst speak – My masters, on pain of my displeasure, depart the 222 place, and leave us two to ourselves. I must lop his longshanks, 'fore I'll ear to a pair of longshanks.	220: Lluellen is impressed with the traveller's manly courage. 221-3: Lluellen asks the others to leave him alone with his challenger. = cut off.
224	K. Edw. They are fair marks, sir, and I must defend 226 as I may. – Davy, be gone. – Hold here, my hearts: long-legs gives you this amongst you to spend blows 228 one with another.	223: longshanks = there is obvious irony in Lluellen's referring to the traveller's long limbs, ignorant as he is of the latter's identity. 'fore = before. ear = Dyce notes this cannot be the right word, but what the right word is unknowable. Dodsley suggests emending to yield .
230	[Exeunt Friar and Rice ap Meredith with Prisoners.]	= ie. valuable coins.
232	David. [Aside] Now Davy's days are almost come at end.	226: Davy, be gone = Edward directs Sir David to join the others in disappearing. 226-8: Hold here...another = it is unclear what Edward hands over and to whom he gives it; none of the editors comment.
234	[Sir David Retires.]	233: Sir David may realize that there is a good chance Edward will kill Lluellen in this fight, in which case his life will become much more difficult. In the quartos, this line actually appears as the last line of Edward's last speech; I accept Dyce's suggestion to make it a separate speech, and an aside, for Sir David.
236	Mort. [Aside] But, Mortimer, this sight is strange. Stay thou in some corner to see what will befall in this battle.	235: rather than absent himself completely, David retires to a position from where he can watch the anticipated battle between the king and his brother. Mortimer will do the same.
240	[Mortimer Retires.]
242	K. Edw. Now, Robin of the Wood, alias Robin Hood,	243-8: Edward reveals himself.

244	be it known to your worship by these presents , that the longshanks which you aim at have brought the King of England into these mountains to see Lluellen and to	= "by my words". ¹
246		= printed as use in the quartos, emended by Dyce as shown; Hook, however, emends to sue , meaning "pursue".
248	crack a blade with his man that supposeth himself Prince of Wales.	247-8: his man...Wales = "the man who believes or imagines himself to be the Prince of Wales." Lluellen actually is legally recognized as the Prince of Wales, by the Treaty of Montgomery of 1267, but Edward has christened baby Edward as the new, true Prince of Wales. Young Edward was not given the title of Prince of Wales until 1301, when he was sixteen years old, long after Lluellen had died.
250	Lluel. What, Sir King! welcome to Cambria. What,
252	foolish Edward, darest thou endanger thyself to travel these mountains? Art thou so foolish-hardy as to combat with the Prince of Wales?	= fool-hardy.
254	K. Edw. What I dare, thou seest; what I can perform ,
256	thou shalt shortly know. I think thee a gentleman, and therefore hold no scorn to fight with thee.	= "you can see for yourself". = ie. "am capable of doing".
258		256-7: I think...with thee = Edward acknowledges Lluellen to be a nobleman, and thus worthy for him to meet in a duel; it was customary for individuals to only fight those who are of their own class.
260	Lluel. No, Edward; I am as good a man as thyself.
262	K. Edw. That shall I try.
264	[They fight, and Sir David takes his brother Lluellen's part and Mortimer takes the King's.]	263-4: suddenly and surprisingly, David enters the fray on his brother's side, and the potter jumps in to fight alongside the king.
266	Hallo, Edward! how are thy senses confounded! –	= confused.
268	What, Davy, is it possible thou shouldst be false to England ?	= disloyal. = ie. "me".
270	David. Edward, I am true to Wales, and so have been friends since my birth, and that shall the King of England know to his cost.
272
274	Lluel. What, potter, did not I charge you to be gone with your fellows?	= order.
276
278	Mort. No, traitor, no potter I, but Mortimer, the Earl of March, whose coming to these woods is to deceive thee of thy love , and reserved to save my sovereign's life.	= trick or cheat. = ie. Elinor. = held in ready.
280
282	David. Upon them, brother! let them not breathe .	= rest.
284	[King Edward hath Lluellen down and David hath Mortimer down.]	284-5: here is an opportunity for a well-choreographed tag-team stage battle; Edward overpowers Lluellen, while David pins down Mortimer.
286
288	K. Edw. Villain, thou diest! God and my right have prevailed.
290	David. Base earl! now doth David triumph in thine overthrow . – Ay is me! Lluellen at the feet of	290: overthrow = defeat.

292	Longshanks!	Ay is me = about to slay Mortimer, David suddenly notices that Edward has his brother at the latter's mercy.
294	K. Edw. What, Mortimer under the sword of such a traitor!
296
298	Mort. Brave king, run thy sword up to the hilts into the blood of the rebel.
300	K. Edw. O, Mortimer, thy life is dearer to me than millions of rebels!
302
304	David. Edward, release my brother, and Mortimer lives.	= the quartos print relieve , emended by Dyce.
306	K. Edw. Ay, villain, thou knowest too well how dear I hold my Mortimer. – [To Lluellen.] Rise, man, and assure thee that the hate I bear to thee is love in respect	308: love = the quartos print long , emended by Dodsley.
308	of the deadly hatred I bear to that notorious rebel .	308-9: in respect of = ie. compared to.
310		= ie. David, whose deception Edward deems more despicable compared to the undisguised opposition of Lluellen.
312	Mort. Away! his sight to me is like the sight of a cockatrice . – Villain , I go to revenge me on thy	314: cockatrice = legendary and oft referred-to mythological creature whose gaze was believed to be fatal. Villain = Mortimer addresses David.
314	treason, and to make thee pattern to the world of mountainous treason , falsehood, and ingratitude.	= an example. = the quartos print mountains , emended as shown by Hook; Dyce emends to monstrous , as monstrous treason appears a second time later in the play.
316	[Exeunt King Edward and Mortimer.]
318	David. Brother, a chafes; but hard was your hap to be overmastered by the coward.	= "he". = "it was tough luck for you".
320
322	Lluel. No coward, David: his courage is like to the lion, and were it not that rule and sovereignty set us at jar, I could love and honour the man for his valour.	= similar to that of. 322-3: were it...at jar = if it was not for the Welshman Lluellen's natural and necessary opposition to the king of England.
324
326	David. But the potter, – O, the villain will never out of my mind whilst I live! and I will lay to be revenged on his villainy.	325-6: out of my mind = "leave my thoughts". = devise, scheme. ⁴
328
330	Lluel. Well, David, what will be shall be; therefore casting these matters out of our heads , David, thou art welcome to Cambria. Let us in and be merry after this	= "forgetting about these matters for now". = "go in".
332	cold cooling, and to prepare to strengthen ourselves against the last threatenings.	332-3: to prepare...threatenings = ie. "prepare ourselves for the next time when we have to meet the English in battle." to = may be omitted or emended to so . ³
334	[Exeunt.]
		David Turns on Edward: from the time of Edward's return from Crusade in 1274 until 1282, David had served Edward loyally, a continuing enemy of his elder brother. However, it was in 1282 that David seems to have secretly conspired with Lluellen, and on Palm Sunday David successfully

SCENE XIII.

Carnarvon Castle, Wales.

After the christening and marriage done, the Herolds having attended, they pass over; the Bride is led by two Noblemen, Edmund of Lancaster and Earl of Sussex and the Bishop.

Edward sits within a tent.

attacked Hawarden Castle, and the Welsh rebellion once again became full blown. It was this point that Edward decided that it was time once and for all to crush the Gruffydd brothers, and he spent the summer raising an enormous army with which to complete the project.

Entering Characters: the christening of baby Edward and the marriage of Gloucester and Joan appear to have taken place one after the other.

pass over = cross over the stage.

the Bride = ie. Joan.

Young Edward was born in 1284; Gloucester and Joan actually married in 1290, when Gloucester was 48 years old, and Joan only 18.

When Joan was only five years old, Edward had entered into negotiations for her to marry Hartmann, the eldest son of the Holy Roman Emperor Rudolf of Hapsburg. A wedding date of September 1279 had even been set, but the ceremony was repeatedly delayed. The project finally had to be abandoned when Hartmann accidentally drowned in 1282.⁹

1 Gloc. Welcome, Joan, Countess of Gloucester, to 2 Gilbert de Clare for ever!

4 Suss. God give them joy! – Cousin Gloucester, let us 6 now go visit the king and queen, and present their majesties with their young son, Edward Prince of Wales.

8 *Then all pass in their order to King Edward's
10 pavilion; the King sits in his tent,
12 with his Pages about him.*

= by rank.

= a large, stately tent.¹

14 = the quartos print represent, emended by Dyce.

16 Bishop. We here present your highness most humbly 18 with your young son, Edward of Carnarvon, Prince of Wales.

[Sound trumpets.]

20 Omnes. God save Edward of Carnarvon, Prince of Wales!

22 K. Edw. Edward, Prince of Wales, God bless thee
24 with long life and honour! [Kisses him.] – Welcome,
Joan, Countess of Gloucester! God bless thee and thine 26 for ever! [Kisses her.] – Lords, let us visit my queen and wife, whom we will at once present with a son and daughter honoured to her desire.

28 [Sound trumpets: they all march to Queen Elinor's
30 chamber; the Bishop speaks to her in her bed.]

32	Bishop. We humbly present your majesty with your young son, Edward of Carnarvon, Prince of Wales.
34		[Sound trumpets.]
36	All. God save Edward of Carnarvon, Prince of Wales.
38	Elinor. [She kisses the prince.] Gramercies, Bishop: hold, take that to buy thee a rochet . –	39-40: Elinor pays the Bishop for his services. = an ecclesiastical vestment worn by bishops; ¹ Elinor is droll.
40
42		[Gives purse.]
44	Welcome, Welshman . – Here, nurse, open him and have him to the fire, for God's sake; they have touzed him, and washed him throughly , and that be good. – And welcome, Joan, Countess of Gloucester! God bless thee with long life, honour, and heart's-ease! – I am now as good as my word, Gloucester; she is thine: make much of her, gentle earl.	= ie. little Edward. = ie. "bring him near" = toused, ie. handled roughly. ¹ = ie. by dunking the baby in the baptismal fount. throughly = common form of "thoroughly".
46
48
50
52	K. Edw. Now, my sweet Nell, what more commandeth my queen, that nothing may want to pérfect her contentment?	= be lacking.
54
56	Elinor. Nothing, sweet Ned; but pray, my king, to feast the lords and ladies royally: – and thanks a thousand times, good men and women, to you all for this duty and honour done to your prince.
58
60
62	K. Edw. Master bridegroom, by old custom this is your waiting-day . – Brother Edmund, revel it now or	62: waiting-day = Bullen suggests the reference is to a custom in which the bridegroom waits on his bride and guests on his wedding day. In the quartos, the following line appears after waiting-day : "Sir David, you may command all ample welcome in our court for your countrymen." Of course, after his treachery, David has been left behind with his brother, and so the editors omit this misplaced line. ³
64	never for honour of your England's son. – Gloucester, now, like a brave bridegroom, marshal this meinie , and	= "arrange this company", usually referring to placing everyone at a table during or for a banquet. ^{1,3} meinie = a body of individuals attending a powerful person. ^{1,3} The quartos print manie , which Dyce chooses to emend instead to many .
66	set these lords and ladies to dancing; so shall you fulfil the old English proverb, "'Tis merry in hall when beards wag all."	66-67: 'Tis merry...wag all = "it is a sure sign all are merry when all the beards are shaking with laughter" (Brewer, p. 607), ¹⁰ an oft-quoted proverb.
68		At this point, a large ensemble dance takes place - another musical interlude.
70	[After the show, and the King and Queen, with all the Lords and Ladies, being in place , enter Versses with a halter about his neck.]	= ie. seated.
72	K. Edw. What tidings brings Versses to our court?	= news.
74

	Vers. Tidings to make thee tremble, English king.	= fulfilling his promise to Baliol to treat Edward with contempt, Versses addresses the king with the insulting thee .
76	K. Edw. Me tremble, boy! must not be news from Scotland	= ie. "there is no news".
78	Can once make English Edward stand aghast.	= ie. "which can".
80	Vers. Baliol hath chosen at this time to stir;	= himself. = throw off.
82	To rouse him lion-like, and cast the yoke
84	That Scots ingloriously have borne from thee And all the predecessors of thy line; And make his roads to re-obtain his right ,	= inroads. = ie. to rule autonomously.
86	And for his homage sends thee all this despite .	= ie. "this halter to spite thee." Later editions usually omit all , as homage is always stressed on its first syllable.
88	Lanc. Why, how now, princox! prat'st thou to a king?	= impertinent fellow. ² = "are you babbling".
90	Vers. I do my message truly from my king: This sword and target chide in louder terms.
92	I bring defiance from King John Baliol To English Edward and his barons all.	= light round shield. ² = reprove. ²
94	K. Edw. Marry, so methinks, thou defiest me with a witness.	94: with a witness = "without doubt" ¹ or "with a vengeance". ⁷
96	Vers. Baliol, my king, in Barwick makes his court:	= ie. Berwick, a walled town on the border of Scotland and England.
98	His camp he spreads upon the sandy plain, And dares thee to the battle in his right .	= "as is within his rights as a king."
100	Lanc. What, court and camp in Englishmen's despite?
102	K. Edw. Hold, messenger: commend me to thy king: Wear thou my chain , and carry this to him.	103: my chain = ie. a gold chain worn around the neck. this = the halter.
104	Greet all his rout of rebels more or less ;	= band. ³ = ie. of high and low rank.
106	Tell them such shameful end will hit them all: And wend with this as resolutely back	= ie. a hanging.
	As thou to England brought'st thy Scottish braves .	= proceed. ¹
108	Tell, then, disdainfully Baliol from us ,	= expressions of defiance.
	We'll rouse him from his hold , and make him soon
110	Dislodge his camp and take his wallèd town .	= ie. me.
112	Say what I bid thee, Versses, to his teeth , And earn this favour and a better thing.	= a metaphor from hunting: "force Baliol to emerge from his shelter", as if he were game.
114	Vers. Yes, King of England, whom my heart beloves:	= ie. "I'll take", meaning "I'll capture". = ie. Berwick.
	Think , as I promised him to brave thee here,	= the modern version would be, "right to his face".
116	So shall I bid John Baliol base from thee.	= ie. the gift of the chain.
118	K. Edw. So shalt thou earn my chain and favour, Versses, And carry him this token that thou send'st .	115: wow! having performed his errand to the letter, the honourable Versses now openly acknowledges his affection for Edward.
		= believe.
		= "challenge Baliol to pursuit", ie. to try to catch him, as if he were game, ²⁴ or "challenge to an encounter" (Bullen). The reference is to the expression bid the base , which is used in an ancient game called prisoner's bars . ²⁴
		119: him = ie. "to him".

[Exit Versses.]

Why, now is England's harvest ripe: –
Barons, now may you reap the rich renown
That under warlike colours springs in field,
And grows where ensigns wave upon the plains. –

False Baliol, Berwick is no hold of proof
To shroud thee from the strength of Edward's arm:

No, Scot; thy treason's fear shall make the breach

For England's pure renown to enter in.

Omnis. Amain, amain, upon these treacherous Scots!
Amain, say all, upon these treacherous Scots!

K. Edw. While we with Edmund, Gloucester, and the rest,
With speedy journeys gather up our forces,
And beat these braving Scots from England's bounds. –
Mortimer, thou shalt take the rout in task
That revel here and spoil fair Cambria.

My queen, when she is strong and well a-foot,
Shall post to London and repose her there.

Then God shall send us happily all to meet,
And joy the honours of our victories.
Take vantage of our foes and see the time,
Keep still our hold, our fight yet on the plain.

Baliol, I come, – proud Baliol and ingrate, –
Prepared to chase thy men from England's gate.

[Exeunt.]

SCENE XIV.

Berwick.

Enter Baliol with his train.

this token = ie. the halter, as a threat.

thou send'st = Dodsley suggests perhaps emending this to thou scornest, Dyce to thou see'st, and Bullen to 'a send'st'.

123f: it seems that Edward has been waiting for the opportunity to go to war and smash the Scots, and is gleeful that the opening has now arrived.

123-6: in this extended agricultural metaphor, the full-grown crops represent the boiling over of the relationship with Scotland into war, and the concomitant opportunity the English lords now have to gain glory in battle.

renown (line 124) = fame.

ensigns (line 126) = banners.

= disloyal, rebellious. = impenetrable fort.¹

= protect.

= metaphorically create the opening (as in a defensive wall), ie. opportunity.

= complete or unmitigated fame.¹

= all. = "at full speed!"

135-7: Edward and his nobles will hurry home and raise an army to drive the Scots back across the border.

138-9: Mortimer, meanwhile, is directed to stay in Wales and finish off the Welsh rebellion once and for all.
rout = rabble.

= ie. able to walk again after recovering from childbirth.

141: post = hurry.

repose = "remain"; the quartos print repaste her, ie. repast her, meaning "to refresh herself with food and drink",¹ which is not quite right, and hence emended by Dyce.

= perhaps.¹

= delight in.

= "take the advantage of", an imperative.

= "hang on to, and never surrender, the fortress, ie. Carnarvon."

= ie. "I am prepared"; the quartos print perswaded, emended by Dodsley.

= retinue.

1	Bali. Princes of Scotland and my loving friends, Whose necks are overwearied with the yoke	= exhausted, worn out.
2		2-5: here is a great example of the figure of speech known as a submerged metaphor : the nobles are compared to oxen , without the word oxen ever being mentioned.
3		= ie. under.
4	And servile bondage of these Englishmen, Lift up your horns, and with your brazen hoofs Spurn at the honour of your enemies.	4-5: continuing with his metaphor comparing the Scottish to beasts of burden wearing the yokes of slavery, Baliol instructs his magnates to throw off those yokes. brazen = powerful. ² spurn = kick; the quartos print spurre , emended by Dyce.
5
6	'Tis not ambitious thoughts of private rule Have forced your king to take on him these arms;	6-7: Baliol assures his nobles that he is not rebelling against England for personal reasons.
7		= ie. "it is for the".
8	'Tis country's cause; it is the common good Of us and of our brave posterity .	= worthy descendants.
9	To arms, to arms!
10	Versses by this hath told the king our minds,	= by now, by this time.
11	And he hath braved proud England to the proof :	= to the utmost, ¹ ie. "to the greatest degree possible".
12	We will remunerate his resolution	= ie. reward Versses' steadfastness. ¹
13	With gold, with glory, and with kingly gifts.
14
15	Ist Lord. By sweet Saint Jerome , Versses will not spare	16-19: the Lord expresses confidence that Versses will have acted as insultingly as possible towards Edward. By sweet Saint Jerome = an unusual but not unique oath; in the same era we find " by sweet s(aints) peter and paule " (1583) and " by sweet s(aint) andrew " (1598).
16		= openly oppose, defy. ¹ = arrogant. ⁷
17
18	To tell his message to the English king, And beard the jolly Longshanks to his face, Were he the greatest monarch in the world.
19	And here he comes: his halter makes him haste .	= "makes him hurry;" the Lord recalls Baliol's instructions to Versses at Scene IX.17-19.
20 21
22	Enter Versses.
23
24	Vers. Long live my lord, the rightful king of Scots.
25
26	Bali. Welcome, Versses! what news from England? Like to the messenger of Scotland's king?	27: "did you behave in a manner appropriate for the messenger of a king?" messenger = printed as measure in the quartos, emended by Dyce.
27
28	Vers. Versses, my lord, in terms like to himself ,	= "spoke in words appropriate for himself"; Versses speaks of himself in the third person.
29
30	Like to the messenger of Scottish king, Defied the peers of England and her lords ,	= the quarto prints their lords ; we accept Dyce's emendation as shown, but Bullen's suggestion - their swords - though more radical, is not unacceptable.
31
32	That all his barons trembles at my threats, And Longshanks himself, as daunted and amazed, Gazed on my face, not witting what to say ;	= emended by Dyce to trembled .
33	Till rousing up he shaked his threatening hair:
34	"Versses," quoth he, "take thou King Edward's chain, Upon condition thou a message do	= not clever enough to come up with something with which to reply.

38 To Baliol, false perjured Baliol";
For in these terms he bad me greet your grace,
40 And gave this halter to your excellence.
I took the chain, and give your grace the rope.

42 Bali. You took the chain, and give my grace the rope! –
44 Lay hold on him. – Why, miscreant,
And dar'st thou bring a halter to thy king?
46 But I will quite thy pain, and in that chain
Upon a silver gallows shalt thou hang,
48 That honoured with a golden rope of England,
And a silver gibbet of Scotland, thou mayst
50 Hang in the air for fowls to feed upon,
And men to wonder at. – Away with him!
52 Away!

54 [Exeunt.]

= instructed, commanded.¹

43f: Baliol sees Versses' gesture as an insult.

= seize. = misshapen traitor.¹

recreant = one who has broken allegiance.

= "requite (ie. repay) your efforts". = ie. from.

= ie. "that in being". = ie. Edward's gold chain.

= gallows, or a post with an extending arm from which a criminal's corpse was left to hang after execution.¹

Edward Responds to the Scottish Rebellion: Edward wasted not a moment in deciding to wage terrible war on the Scots for their perfidy in allying with the French. Hurrying north with a hastily-gathered army of his own, Edward attacked and captured Berwick in only three days. The English soldiers committed great slaughter on the streets of Berwick, killing perhaps up to 10,000 Scotsmen.^{6,9}

Baliol was not in Berwick at the time; nor was he with his army, which was being led by half-a-dozen earls. The Scottish monarch instead was fleeing north, hoping to evade Edward, but the latter, fed up with his vassal, continued north with his forces, intent on hunting Baliol down.

The National Biography reports that while in Berwick, Edward received a formal renunciation from Baliol of his fealty and homage, to which Edward is supposed to have responded (in Norman French), "Has the foolish fellow done such folly?"

SCENE XV.

Somewhere in Wales.

Enter Mortimer with Soldiers, pursuing the rebels.

Scene XV: following the single-combat with Edward, Lluellen seems to have risen into rebellion again; Mortimer, following Edward's instructions to put down the Welsh, is now in hot pursuit of Lluellen and his army.

A Very Short Scene XV: in terms of spoken words - of which there are 20 - this scene is shorter than any scene in any of Shakespeare's works (his shortest is from Antony and Cleopatra, Act III.ix, with 30 words).

= ie. man.

= lays waste to;¹ a rare use of havoc as a verb.

5-6: completely mystifying lines.

Edward's Second Campaign in Wales, 1282: our play touches on neither the causes of the rekindling of the war

1 Mort. Strike up that drum! follow, pursue, and chase!
2 Follow, pursue! spare not the proudest he
3 That havocs England's sacred royalty!

4 [Then make the proclamation upon the walls.
5 Sound trumpets.]

with Lluellen, nor the details of Edward's second major invasion of Wales.

The peace that was settled on the Welsh after the invasion of 1277 was seen as unduly harsh by the natives; Edward had imposed a level of English control which had never been seen before from previous English monarchs; traditional Welsh laws and customs were forcibly replaced by those of the conquerors, and Lluellen made sure to enflame the feeling of resentment amongst his countrymen.

At some point in this period, David reconciled with his brother, and the two secretly planned a whole new reign of terror against the English foe.

The treachery came into the open in the dead of night on Palm Sunday, 1282, when David led a Welsh band that attacked Hawarden Castle, seizing Edward's friend Roger Clifford from his bed, and murdering most of his men. Joined quickly by Lluellen, the rebels began a fresh and bloody campaign, attacking English castles, grabbing hostages, and generally plunging most of Wales into chaos.

Edward followed the same plan as he had in 1277, with soldiers and engineers working together, building roads and planning further castle construction, gradually squeezing Lluellen once again into starvation in the north.⁹

SCENE XVI.

Carnarvon Castle, Wales.

Enter Queen Elinor.

1 Qu. Elin. Now fits the time to purge our melancholy,
2 And be revenged upon this London dame. — Katherina!

1-2: Elinor, in order to lighten her mood, will finally exact her revenge on the Mayoress. In this scene, Elinor finally reaches the apotheosis of her increasingly deranged behaviour.

melancholy = usual term used to describe general depression.

Enter Katherine.

6 Kath. At hand, madam.

Entering Character: Katherine, we remember, is a lady-in-waiting of the queen.

8 = "I am right here."

10 Qu. Elin. Bring forth our London Mayoress here.

12 Kath. I will, madam.

[Exit Katherine.]

14 Qu. Elin. Now, Nell,
16 Bethink thee of some tortures for the dame,
18 And purge thy choler to the uttermost.

= an imperative: "come up with", "invent".

17: purge thy choler = "mollify your wrath".

uttermost = more common alternative to utmost; it was not until the 1620's that uttermost began to fall out of favour.

20 Enter Mayoress with Katherine.

	Now, Mistress Mayoress, you have attendance urged.	= the Mayoress has been asking the queen for an official position in her retinue, beyond that of general servant.
22	And therefore to requite your courtesy, Our mind is to bestow an office on you straight .	= repay. = ie. "my". = right away.
24
26	Mayoress. Myself, my life, and service, mighty queen, Are humbly at your majesty's command.
28	Qu. Elin. Then, Mistress Mayoress, say whether will you be our nurse or laundress?
30
32	Mayoress. Then may it please your majesty To entertain your handmaid for your nurse.	= ie. "employ me". handmaid = servant.
34	She will attend the cradle carefully.
36	Qu. Elin. O, no, nurse; the babe needs no great rocking; it can lull itself. – Katherina, bind her in the chair, and let me see how she'll become a nurse .	= "how suitable she is to be a nurse."
38
40	[The Mayoress is bound to the chair.]
42	So: now, Katherine, draw forth her breast, and let the serpent suck his fill.	41-42: with these instructions, Katherine must produce a poisonous snake.
44
46	[The serpent is applied to her breast.]
48	Why, so; now she is a nurse. – Suck on, sweet babe.	= addressed to the snake, which is of course a substitute for a real human baby.
50
52	Mayoress. Ah, queen, sweet queen, seek not my blood to spill, For I shall die before this adder have his fill!
54	Qu. Elin. Die or die not, my mind is fully pleased. – Come, Katherina: to London now will we , And leave our Mayoress with her nursery.
56	Kath. Farewell, sweet Mayoress, look unto the babe.
58
60	[Exeunt Queen Elinor and Katherine.]
62	Mayoress. Farewell, proud queen, the author of my death, The scourge of England and to English dames! – Ah, husband, sweet John Bearmber, Mayor of London,	61: a scan of a list of Lord Mayors reveals no man by the name of John Bearmber; there was a Sir John Bernes, who served 1370-1, and a Sir Nicholas Brembre, who served first in 1377, then again 1383-5. ⁴⁷
64	Ah, didst thou know how Mary is perplexed , Soon wouldest thou come to Wales, and rid me of this pain; But, O, I die! my wish is all in vain.	= the Mayoress' given name. = tormented. ¹
66
	[She dies.]
	SCENE XVII.

36	To spoil the weed that chokes fair Cambria!	= metaphorically, kill Lluellen. spoil = destroy. ¹
38	Hale him from hence, and in this busky wood Bury his corpse; but for his head, I vow I will present our governor with the same.	= "drag him away". ² = shrub- or bush-filled. ² = commander, ¹ ie. Mortimer.
40	[Exeunt.]	Roger Lestrange, captain of the English forces, sent a letter to Edward after the battle, writing, "Know, Sire, that Llywelyn ap Gruffudd is dead, his army broken, and the flower of the men killed." Accompanying the letter was the ultimate proof that the Welsh prince had been slain - his head (Morris, p. 186). The Capture of Lluellen: Roger Mortimer actually had died six weeks before the battle that ended the life of Wales' first great freedom-fighter. The English forces were led by Roger's son, named Edmund. Roger was buried at Wigmore. David After the Battle: having escaped from Irfon Bridge, David became a fugitive in the bogs and woods of Snowden. Earnestly pursued by the English, David was finally caught, either in a marsh or in a cottage, in the company of nine of his children. Placed under heavy guard, David was brought to Shrewsbury to await his fate.⁹
	SCENE XVIII.
	Near Irfon Bridge, Wales.
	Enter the Friar with a halter about his neck.
1	Friar. Come, my gentle Richard , my true servant, that	= the Friar addresses his pike-staff.
2	in some storms have stood thy master; hang thee , I	2: stood = ie. stood by. ³ hang thee = the Friar, ready to give up his tacit support for the Welsh rebellion, hangs his pike-staff on a tree as a symbolic gesture
4	pray thee, lest I hang for thee; and down on thy	= meaning his own.
5	marrowbones , like a foolish fellow that have gone far astray, and ask forgiveness of God and King Edward	= ie. knees; here the Friar kneels.
6	for playing the rake-hell and the rebel here in Wales.	= from.
7	Ah, gentle Richard, many a hot breakfast have we	= dissolute or immoral scoundrel. ¹
8	been at together! and now since, like one of Mars his frozen knights , I must hang up my weapon upon this	= metaphor for the many rows the Friar has taken part in.
		8-9: like one...weapon = a reference to the Roman gladiators' custom of hanging up their arms as a votive offering at the end of their careers; ⁴ medieval knights similarly hung up their weapons in a church when they retired. ⁷
		Mars his = Mars'; Mars is the Roman god of war.
		frozen knights = an unclear allusion; ³ this collocation appeared in a couple of contemporary literary works, in which the knights were described as frozen from despair; in that same vein, then, Bullen wonders if frozen here means something like "numbed with age" (p. 190).

10	tree, and come per misericordiam to the mad potter Mortimer, wring thy hands, Friar, and sing a pitiful farewell to thy pike-staff at parting.	= "appealing to pity", properly ad misericordiam .
12
14	[The Friar sings his farewell to his pike-staff. he takes his leave of Cambria: exit the Friar.]	15: as we shall see in a moment, the Friar doesn't get very far before he runs into Mortimer. exit the Friar = as Hook notes, the Friar need not leave the stage; he may remain on his knees until Mortimer stumbles upon him early in the next scene.
	SCENE XIX.
	Near Irfon Bridge, Wales.
	Enter Mortimer with his Soldiers, [David led captive] and the Lady Elinor.	Entering Characters: Mortimer continues mop-up operations in Wales. Sir David's entrance is not indicated in the quartos, but the editors generally agree he must be the traitor referred to in line 1 below.
1	Mort. Bind fast the traitor and bring him away, that	= ie. Sir David.
2	the law may justly pass upon him, and [he] receive the
4	reward of monstrous treasons and villainy, stain to the
6	name and honour of his noble country! – For you that
8	slew Lluellen and presented us with his head, the king
10	shall reward your fortune and chivalry. – Sweet lady,
	abate not thy looks so heavenly to the earth: God and	= "do not cast down your heavenly looks toward the earth", ie. "do not hang your head down."
	the King of England hath honour for thee in store, and Mortimer's heart [is] at [thy] service and at thy commandment.
12	Elinor. Thanks, gentle lord; but, alas, who can blame
	Elinor to accuse her stars , that in one hour hath lost
14	honour and contentment ?	= "for blaming the stars for her ill luck"; another reference to the alignment of the stars or planets and their influence on one's fortune. = happiness.
16	Mort. And in one hour may your ladyship recover
18	both, if you vouchsafe to be advised by your friends . –	= "permit yourself to accept the advice and assistance of those who admire you" - Mortimer indirectly means himself here.
20
22	– But what makes the Friar here upon his marrowbones?
24	Friar. O, potter, potter, the Friar doth sue ,	24-25: the Friar asks Mortimer to be his new patron. sue = entreat, beg.
26	Now his old master is slain and gone, to have a new.
28	Elinor. [Aside]
	Ah, sweet Lluellen, how thy death I rue!
30	Mort. Well said, Friar! better once than never. Give me thy hand [Raising him.] my cunning shall fail me	= ie. literally, "my discernment or good judgment may be lacking", ie. "this may not be my best decision ever".

32	but we will be fellows yet; and now Robin Hood is gone, it shall cost me hot water but thou shalt be King	= companions.
34	Edward's man: only I enjoin thee this – come not too	33-34: it shall...man = ie. "I may get reprimanded for this decision, but I will convince Edward to take you into his retinue."
36	near the fire, but, good Friar, be at my hand .	34: enjoin thee this = ie. "impose this restriction on you".
38	Friar. O, sir; no, sir, not so, sir; 'a was warned too lately; none of that flesh I love.	34-35: come not...fire = an admonishment to the Friar to keep away from Elinor, given the cleric's behaviour in Scene VIII. ⁴
40	Mort. Come on: and for those that have made their submission and given their names, in the king's name I	The quartos print Frier instead of fire , emended by Dyce.
42	pronounce their pardons; and so God save King	= "remain near me at all times."
44	Edward I.	37-38: 'a was...lately = ie. "he was warned too recently"; but Bullen's suggestion to change warned to warmed makes sense, connecting as it may with fire in line 35.
	[Exeunt.]	flesh = allusion to the Friar's womanizing.
		40-41: made their submission = surrendered unconditionally.
		The Fate of Lady Elinor: the unlucky daughter of the Earl of Leicester was actually dead before her husband Lluellen was slain in December 1282. She had died giving birth to the couple's daughter on 19 June 1282 at Windsor Castle, while she was visiting the English court. Baby Gwenllian was deposited at a convent at Sepringham, where she subsequently spent her entire life, dying in 1337 just shy of her 55th birthday. ⁹ SCENE XX.
	Charing Green.	The Setting: Charing village, just west of old London.
	Thunder and lightning. Enter Queen Elinor and Joan.	Entering Characters: in this scene, we see the queen's mental condition has completely broken down.
1	Qu. Elin. Why, Joan,
2	Is this the welcome that the clouds affords ?	= provide; note the typical lack of agreement between subject and verb.
4	How dare these disturb our thoughts, knowing
5	That I am Edward's wife and England's Queen,
6	Here thus on Charing-Green to threaten me?
6	Joan. Ah, mother, blaspheme not so!	= deed.
8	Your blaspheming and other wicked deeds
10	Have caused our God to terrify your thoughts.
12	And call to mind your sinful fact committed	= mercy.
14	Against the Mayoress here of lovely London,	= ie. killed.
	And better Mayoress London never bred,
	So full of ruth and pity to the poor:
	Her have you made away ,
	That London cries for vengeance on your head.

16	Qu. Elin. I rid her not; I made her not away: By Heaven I swear, traitors They are to Edward and to England's Queen That say I made away the Mayoress.	= dispatched. ³
22	Joan. Take heed, sweet lady-mother, swear not so: A field of prize-corn will not stop their mouths That say you have made away that virtuous woman.	23: ie. "you can't get people to stop talking even if you gave them something delicious to chew on."
26	Qu. Elin. Gape, earth, and swallow me, and let my soul Sink down to hell, if I were author of That woman's tragedy! –
30	[The earth opens and swallows her up.]	30: an opportunity for some dramatic special effects of the type audiences so much enjoyed. We note that this stage direction was added by later editors.
32	O, Joan, help, Joan, Thy mother sinks!
34	Joan. O, mother! my help is nothing! – O, she is sunk, And here the earth is new-closed up again. Ah, Charing-Green, for ever change thy hue. And never may the grass grow green again, But wither and return to stones, because That beauteous Elinor sink on thee! Well, I Will send unto the king my father's grace, And satisfy him of this strange mishap.	36: colour. 38: = Dyce emends to sunk . 40: = notify. 42: = "let him know". = calamity. ²
44	[Exit Joan.]
SCENE XXI.
Montrose, Scotland.
Alarum; a charge: after long skirmish, assault; flourish.
Enter King Edward with his train, and Baliol prisoner.
1	K. Edw. Now, trothless king, what fruits have braving boasts?	1: trothless = faithless, treacherous. what fruits...boasts = ie. "what comes from your defiance and boasting?"
2	What end hath treason but a sudden fall? Such as have known thy life and bringing up,	= breeding.
4	Have praised thee for thy learning and thy art: How comes it, then, that thou forget'st thy books	= scholarship. = knowledge. ²
6	That schooled thee to forget ingratitude? Unkind! this hand hath 'nointed thee a king;	6: "which instructed you to never display ingratitude?" = unappreciative. ¹

8	This tongue pronounced the sentence of thy ruth:	8: perhaps, "this tongue proclaimed to all your merciful nature."
10	If thou, in lieu of mine unfeignèd love, Hast levied arms for to attempt my crown, Now see thy fruits: thy glories are dispersed ;	= place. = ie. "you have". = in order to. = dissipated.
12	And heifer-like , sith thou hast passed thy bounds , Thy sturdy neck must stoop to bear this yoke.	12-13: Edward describes Baliol as if he were an intractable bovine. heifer-like = like a young cow; the quartos print a nonsensical his, for like ; the emendation is Dyce's. sith = since. passed thy bounds = ie. "left your pasture".
14	Bali. I took this lesson, Edward, from my book, –	15: Baliol touches back on Edward's references to his education at lines 4-6 above.
16	To keep a just equality of mind ,	= an even temperament.
18	Content with every fortune as it comes: So canst thou threat no more than I expect.	= threaten.
20	K. Edw. So, sir: your moderation is enforced;	20: "you display such equanimity now only because you have no other choice."
22	Your goodly glosses cannot make it good.	21: "your attempts to put a positive spin on your situation cannot help but fail."
24	Bali. Then will I keep in silence what I mean, Since Edward thinks my meaning is not good.	26-27: Edward, not completely consumed by thoughts of revenge, affords Baliol an opportunity to give him a reason to spare his life. Throughout the play, Peele repeatedly goes out of his way to present Edward as the soul of reason and moderation.
26	K. Edw. Nay, Baliol, speak forth, if there yet remain A little remnant of persuading art.	= skill in speaking.
28	Bali. If cunning may have power to win the king.	= performing an honourable deed.
30	Let those employ it that can flatter him;	= is appropriate for, befits.
32	If honoured deed may reconcile the king, It lies in me to give and him to take.	38: "how can I trust you when you have already broken faith with me one time?" league = alliance.
34	K. Edw. Why, what remains for Baliol now to give?	42-43: ie. "a king would be foolish to voluntarily surrender his prerogatives over a territory when that territory has already fully submitted to him."
36	Bali. Allegiance, as becomes a royal king.	= spare.
38	K. Edw. What league of faith where league is broken once?	= better option of the two.
40	Bali. The greater hope in them that once have fall'n	48-50: something like, "he who crushes the boastful ostentation (pomp) of aspiring minds, and figuratively smashes the symbol of their power from which trust was supposed to derive, will leave the defeated powerless and harmless." The pronouns don't align exactly right in these lines.
42	K. Edw. But foolish are those monarchs that do yield A conquered realm upon submissive vows.
44	Bali. There, take my crown, and so redeem my life.
46	K. Edw. Ay, sir; that was the choicest plea of both ;
48	For whoso quells the pomp of haughty minds, And breaks their staff whereon they build their trust,
50	Is sure in wanting power, they carry not harm.

52 Baliol shall live; but yet within such bounds
That, if his wings grow flig, they may be clipt.

54 [Exeunt.]

= fledged, ie. grown enough to give a bird flight.³²

Edward Chases Baliol: from Berwick, Edward continued north after the fleeing Scottish monarch, capturing Edinburgh Castle, still in early 1296. Stirling, Perth and Scone surrendered without a fight. On 10 July 1296, at Montrose, Baliol surrendered himself to Edward, handing the latter a white rod, the symbol of resignation by a vassal of his fief to his feudal lord.

Edward, not satisfied, took his army all the way to Elgin, sending a message to all that Scotland was his. A hastily called Scottish parliament met at Berwick, and everyone who attended swore fealty and paid homage to Edward.

Edward famously returned to London taking Scotland's sacred stone of Scone, which was used during Scottish coronation ceremonies, with him.⁹ The stone remained in England for six centuries, finally being returned to its home in 1996 by a British government which was somewhat more sensitive to the feelings of its peoples than was Edward I's.

John Baliol's Fate: Baliol and his son Edward were held as prisoners in England, first at Hertford for one year, and then in the Tower for two more. The pair were freed in response to an appeal by the pope, and Baliol lived the rest of his eventless existence quietly on his estates in France, finally dying at the age of 65 at Castle Galliard.

A tradition grew that the Baliol name was so discredited that the family changed its name "Braille". It was said that the name of Baliol disappeared completely from Scotland after this time.⁹

SCENE XXII.

Potter's Hive.

Thunder and Lightning.
Enter the Potter's Wife, and John her man, near the potter's dwelling, called the Potter's Hive.

The Setting: Potter's Hive is a corruption of Potter's Hithe, or Hythe, a quay on the north side of the Thames, just west of the Southwark Bridge; here many ships from the continent docked to deliver goods to London. The dock was also known as Queen's Hithe. Where the alternate name of Potter's Hithe came from is unknown.⁶

We are not far from Charing Green, where Queen Elinor sank into the ground.

Entering Characters: the family of the Potter was invented by Peele to explain the derivation of the name of the location of Potter's Hive. The original stage direction here is highly confused:

"Enter the Potter and the Potter's Wife, called the Potter's Hive dwelling there, and John her man."

The shown language is Bullen's.

John is the potter's wife's servant. The potter's wife has been visiting with friends, whom they have left to go home.

= "let's go." = "you move".

= ie. "such a great rogue"; the potter's wife teases John about his fear of the elements.

1 P's Wife. John, come away: you go as though you
2 slept. A great knave and be afraid of a little thundering
4 and lightening!

	John. Call you this a little thundering? I am sure my breeches find it a great deal, for I am sure they are stuft with thunder.	5-7: I am sure...thunder = an unusually vulgar line from Peele: John suggests he has soiled his breeches.
6
8
10	P's Wife. They are stuft with a fool, are they not? Will it please you to carry the lantern a little handsomer, and not to carry it with your hands in your	= ie. in such a way so as to make it easier to see where they are stepping.
12	slops?	= wide baggy breeches or trousers. ^{1,3}
14		= "say you!" = "I wish".
16	John. Slops, quoth you! Would I had tarried at home by the fire, and then I should not have need to put my hands in my pockets! But I'll lay my life I know the reason of this foul weather.	= bet.
18
20	P's Wife. Do you know the reason? I pray thee, John, tell me, and let me hear this reason.	= please.
22	John. I lay my life some of your gossips be cross-	22-23: I lay...from = John wagers that it was his mistress's friends (gossips) who raised the storm through their witchcraft. ⁴
24	legged that we came from: but you are wise, mistress, for you come now away, and will not stay a-gossiping in a dry house all night.	22-23: cross-legged = there was a superstition that crossing one's legs brought bad luck, or was even related to sorcery.
26
28	P's Wife. Would it please you to walk and leave off your knavery?	23-25: but you...all night = John is dryly sarcastic: "you were very smart to cause us to leave this dry house (in the middle of a storm)."
30	[Queen Elinor slowly rises out of the earth.]	= ie. "keep going". = cease. = tomfoolery.
32	But stay, John: what's that riseth out of the ground? Jesus bless us, John! look how it riseth higher and higher!	= wait a moment".
34
36	John. By my troth, mistress, 'tis a woman. Good Lord, do women grow? I never saw none grow before.	36-37: even in his terror, John is able to wittily compare the ascension of Elinor to a growing plant.
38
40	P's Wife. Hold thy tongue, thou foolish knave; it is the spirit of some woman.	= ghost.
42	Qu. Elin. Ha, let me see; where am I? On Charing-Green? Ay, on Charing-Green here, hard by Westminster, where I was crowned, and Edward there made king. Ay, 'tis true; so it is: and therefore, Edward, kiss not me, unless you will straight perfume your lips, Edward.	= close to. = ie. at Westminster Cathedral.
44
46
48
50	P's Wife. Ora pro nobis! John, I pray, fall to your prayers. For my life, it is the queen that chafes thus, who sunk this day on Charing-Green, and now is risen up on Potter's Hive; and therefore truly, John, I'll go to her.	46-47: unless...Edward = ie. unless Edward freshens his breath. = "pray for us!" = "I beg you". = frets. ¹
52
54

[The Potter's Wife goes to the Queen.]

56	Qu. Elin. Welcome, good woman. What place is this? sea or land? I pray shew to me.	= show to, ie. "tell".
60	P's Wife. Your grace need not to fear; you are on firm ground: it is the Potter's Hive: and therefore cheer your majesty, for I will see you safe conducted to the court, if case your highness be therewithal pleased.
62		63: "in case you would be pleased to go there."
64	Qu. Elin. Ay, good woman, conduct me to the court. That there I may bewail my sinful life, And call to God to save my wretched soul.	= lament.
68
70	[A cry of "Westward Ho!"]
72	Woman, what noise is this I hear?
74	P's Wife. And like your grace, it is the watermen that calls for passengers to go westward now.	= if it pleases.
76	Qu. Elin. That fits my turn, for I will straight with them To King's-town to the court,	= purposes. = ie. will go straightaway.
78	And there repose me till the king come home. And therefore, sweet woman, conceal what thou hast seen. And lead me to those watermen, for here Doth Elinor droop.	77: ie. to what is now modern Kingston-upon-Thames, a town on the south bank of the Thames, about 12 miles west of old London. There was a castle here at the time, which had originally been taken by Henry III. ⁶
80		= rest.
82	John. Come, come; here's a goodly leading of you, is
84	there not? first, you must make us afeard, and now I must be troubled in carrying of you. I would you were honestly laid in your bed, so that I were not troubled with you.	= fall, ie. faint; Elinor collapses, and John finds himself tasked with carrying the queen - whose weight reveals her to be corporeal, and not a spirit - to the riverside.
86
88		83-87: John addresses the unconscious queen. goodly leading = fine carrying or conveying; ¹ John is unhappy about this unexpected bit of work. = "scare us". = wish.
	[Exeunt.] SCENE XXIII.
	Somewhere on the Road to London from Scotland.
	Enter King Edward, Edmund (the Earl of Lancaster) and Lords. Enter to them a Messenger.
1	Mess. Honour and fortune wait upon the crown	The Setting: having conquered Scotland, Edward is returning to his capital. Entering Character: the messenger has been sent by Mortimer to announce the end of the Welsh rebellion.

2	Of princely Edward, England's valiant king!
4	K. Edw. Thanks, messenger; and if my God vouchsafe That wingèd Honour wait upon my throne, I'll make her spread her plumes upon their heads . Whose true allegiance doth confirm the crown. What news in Wales? how wends our business there?	= grants. = attend. = "the heads of those". = ie. strengthens, secures.
10	Mess. The false disturber of that wasted soil, With his adherents, is surprised, my king; And in assurance he shall start no more, Breathless he lies, and headless too, my lords. The circumstance these lines shall here unfold.	10: the messenger refers of course to Lluellen.
16	[Gives letter.]	= details. = ie. "this letter".
18	K. Edw. A harmful weed , by wisdom rooted out, Can never hurt the true engrafted plant .	= Lluellen is again described as a weed , as he was by his slayer in Scene XVII.36. = a metaphor for the legitimate king.
20	Enter Sir Thomas Spencer.	Entering Character: Thomas Spencer is an invented personage. The quartos have him enter at the same time as the first Messenger did at the beginning of the scene.
22	But what's the news Sir Thomas Spencer brings?
24	Spenc. Wonders, my lord, wrapt up in homely words, And letters to inform your majesty.	= plain, unadorned.
28	[Gives letters.]
30	[Edward reads letters.]	= stage direction added by editor.
32	K. Edw. O heavens, what may these miracles portend? Nobles, my queen is sick; but what is more – Read, brother Edmund, read a wondrous chance .	= "about an unbelievable occurrence."
36	[Edmund reads a line of the Queen's sinking.]
38	Lanc. And I not heard nor read so strange a thing!	= ie. "I have never".
40	K. Edw. Sweet queen, this sinking is a surfeit ta'en Of pride, wherewith thy woman's heart did swell; A dangerous malady in the heart to dwell. – Lords, march we towards London now in haste: I will go see my lovely Elinor,	= ie. due to an excess.
42	And comfort her after this strange affright;
44	And where she is importune to have talk And secret conference with some friars of France,	= ie. whereas. ³ = insistent. ¹
46	Mun, thou with me, and I with thee will go, And take the sweet confession of my Nell;	= cutely phrased, "together we".
48	We will have French enough to parlè with the queen.
50		48-50: Edward has another plan in mind which will require him to wear a disguise: he and Edmund shall attend the queen dressed as French monks, and obtain her confession to discover what sins she is guilty of.
52	Lanc. Might I advise your royal majesty, I would not go for millions of gold.	= a trisyllabic word: MIL-li-ons .
54	What knows, your grace, disguised if you wend , What you may hear, in secrecy revealed,	= go.

56	That may appal and discontent your highness? A goodly creature is your Elinor, Brought up in niceness and in delicacy: Then listen not to her confession, lord, To wound thy heart with some unkind conceit . –	= the quartos print appeale , emended by Dyce.
58		58: raised in an atmosphere of fastidiousness and fineness. ¹
60	[Aside] But as for Lancaster, he may not go.	= notion, idea.
62
64	K. Edw. Brother, I am resolved , and go I will, If God give life, and cheer my dying queen. Why, Mun, why, man, whate'er King Edward hears, It lies in God and him to pardon all I'll have no ghostly fathers out of France : England hath learnèd clarks and confessors To comfort and absolve, as men may do; And I'll be ghostly father for this once.	61: Edmund, speaking of himself in the third person, expresses a great reluctance to hear Elinor's confession. The reason for this will soon become apparent.
66		= determined.
68
70		= priests; ghostly means spiritual. = ie. coming from. = clerics.
72	Lanc. [Aside] Edmund, thou mayst not go , although thou die:	= "you cannot go".
74	And yet how mayst thou here thy king deny ?	= ie. refuse; but Edmund may also be alluding to something he fears Elinor will confess that will involve him - and how will he be able to successfully deny that something happened?
76	Edward is gracious, merciful, meek, and mild; But furious when he finds he is beguiled .	= deceived.
78	K. Edw. Messenger, hie thee back to Shrewsbury ;	= hurry. = town in Shropshire, near Wales, from where Mortimer presumably sent the Messenger.
80	Bid Mortimer, thy master, speed him fast . And with his fortune welcome us to London. I long to see my beauteous lovely queen.	= ask. = "to hurry (to London)".
82
	[Exeunt.]
	SCENE XXIV.
	Shrewsbury, England.
	Enter Mortimer and Officers, the Friar, Jack, and the Harper, with Sir David drawn on a hurdle, and Lluellen's head on a spear.	The Setting: Mortimer has brought his Welsh prisoners to Shrewsbury in England.
1	Friar. On afore , on afore.	= a frame on runners, ie. a sledge or sleigh, used to carry traitors to their execution site. ²⁴
2	Jack. Hold up your torches for dropping .	= "keep moving".
4	Friar. A fair procession. – Sir David, be of good	= "to prevent them from dripping." ¹
6	cheer: you cannot go out of the way , having so many guides at hand.	= fine, good-looking.
		= become lost (on his way to his execution); you may wish to note in this scene how breezily the Friar, Jack and the Harper, their lives spared, have changed their allegiances to the English.

	Jack. Be sure of that; for we go all the highway to the gallows, I warrant you.	= "are following the main road all the way".
12	David. I go where my star leads me, and die in my country's just cause and quarrel.	= ie. his guiding star. = a common expression.
14	Harp. The star that twinkled at thy birth, Good brother mine, hath marred thy mirth:	= "laid low your sense of humour."
16	An old said saw, earth must to earth.
18	Next year will be a piteous dearth Of hemp, I dare lay a penny, This year is hanged so many.	= pitiful or lamentable shortage. 19: hemp = plant whose fibre is used to make rope (for hanging), or the fibre itself. ¹ lay = wager.
22	Friar. Well said, Morgan Pigot, harper and prophet for the king's own mouth.	23: a common expression, meaning here that Edward has taken the Harper into his employ.
24	Jack. "Tum date dite dote dum,"	25: Jack sings or quotes the Harper's refrain of musical notes from his earliest prophecy; see Scene II.271.
26	This is the day, the time is come; Morgan Pigot's prophecy, And Lord Lluellen's tragedy.	26-28: the Harper's prophecy finally has come true.
30	Friar. Who saith the prophet is an ass Whose prophecies come so to pass? Said he not oft, and sung it too, Lluellen, after much ado,	34-37: allusion to the Harper's prediction at Scene II.406, where he told Lluellen he would be "advanced to be highest of (his) kin."
32	Should in spite heave up his chin And be the highest of his kin?	With his head attached to the top of a pole, the Welsh rebel has indeed reached a level higher than anyone in his family ever had!
34	And see, aloft Lluellen's head,	Empaled = encircled. ²
36	Empalèd with a crown of lead! –
38	My lord, let not this sooth-sayer lack, That hath such cunning in his jack.	= prophet. = ie. go unrewarded. = jacket or jerkin. ^{3,4}
40	Harp. David, hold still your clack,	41-42: the Harper addresses the Friar. clack = chatter, ie. tongue.
42	Lest your heels make your neck crack.	42: ie. "lest you find yourself getting hanged."
44	Friar. Gentle prophet, an ye love me, forspeak me	44: an = if. 44-45: forspeak me not = "do not speak anything against me."
46	not: 'tis the worst luck in the world to stir a witch or anger a wise man. – Master Sheriff, have we any haste? Best give my horses some more hay.	46-47: have we any haste = "can't we go any faster?"
48	[Exeunt.]	David's Execution: after his capture, David was summarily condemned by a special court called in Shrewsbury, and his sentence was carried out immediately, on 3 October, 1283.

Having been a traitor to the king who had both trusted him and even knighted him, David met with an end that was terrible, even by medieval standards.

First, he was dragged (presumably on a hurdle, as depicted in this scene) to the gallows; then, as he was hanged by the neck, but still alive, his entrails were pulled out and burned in front of him. Finally, he was beheaded and quartered. His head was sent to London where it was stuck on a pole and placed on the Tower of London next to the head of Lluellen. Two of his body's "quarters" were sent to Bristol and Northampton.

The cities of York and Winchester vied for the "right shoulder", which Winchester won. York finally was granted the final quarter.⁹

SCENE XXV.

The Palace at Kingston-upon-Thames.

The Setting: we place the scene at Kings-Town, to where the resurrected Elinor had announced she wanted to be taken at Scene XXII.⁷⁷

It is now late in the year 1290; Elinor, having fallen sick with a "low fever" in late summer, was actually settled by the king at Harby, Nottinghamshire, about 140 miles north of London.⁹

This final scene in the quartos is particularly error-filled.

Queen Elinor discovered in child-bed, attended by Joan and other Ladies.

Entering Characters: the curtain is drawn to reveal (discover) Elinor in bed, dying. Why she should be in child-bed is unclear, a likely error in the quartos' stage directions, perhaps for sick-bed.

= famous.

1 Qu. Elin. Call forth those renowmed friars come from France;

[Exit a Lady.]

And raise me, gentle ladies, in my bed,
That while this faltering engine of my speech
I leave to utter my concealèd guilt,
I may repeat and so repent my sins.

6-8: while she still has the power of speech, Elinor wants to make confession of her sins.

while = until.

leave = cease; Hook suggests emending to learn.

repeat = the quartos print respect, emended by Dyce.

= torment.

10 Joan. What plague afflicts your royal majesty?

Ou, Elin. Ah, Joan, I perish through a double-war!

12-20: Elinor suffers doubly, first from a painfully dying body, and second from a guilty conscience.

= ie. her body, a common metaphor.

First in this painful prison of my soul,

14: help = past tense of help.

thee = Dyce emends thee to there; Dodsley suggests here, referring to her heart; either way, the line remains unclear; sense can be given by changing help thee to are there.

15-16: poetically, Elinor's body is failing, and in death all earthly affairs will come to an end

	Next of a war my soul is overpreased ,	17: "in the second war, it is my soul which is greatly burdened". over-preased = ie. over-pressed, ie. oppressed; ²⁸ the d at the end is pronounced as a t .
18	In that my conscience loaded with misdeeds, Sits seeing my confusion to ensue,	18-20: with so many sins on her conscience, Elinor sees herself going to hell, unless God shows mercy on her.
20	Without especial favour from above.	that = the quartos print thee , emended by Dyce; Dodsley would keep thee , so that by saying In thee , Elinor is referring to her special guilt regarding a sin connected to Joan, which she will explain below. confusion = ruin; the quartos print conscience , an accidental copying of the word from the previous line, which Dyce emends to condition , but we go with Bullen's confusion .
22	Joan. Your grace must account it a warrior's cross , To make resist where danger there is none.	22-23: a mild rebuke: "you seem to consider it your duty to find danger to fight even where there is none." account = reckon, consider. warrior's cross = cross could be used to mean a burden, but warrior's cross may be more an allusion to the crosses worn by Crusaders as a symbol to their commitment to fight the enemy in the Holy Land; Elinor, we remember, had accompanied Edward on his year in Palestine. make resist = resist, ie. fight.
24	Subdue your fever by precious art ,	24: an imperative: "control your agitation with a spiritual (precious) ¹ approach". Subdue = Dyce's emendation of the quartos' mystifying Superdewe ; the result is an imperative. precious = Bullen tentatively suggests emending this to religious . art = the ability of a human to modify nature.
26	And help you still through hope of heavenly aid.	25: ie. "and seek mercy from God for your soul."
26	Qu. Elin. The careless shepherds on the mountain's tops,	27: careless = worry-free. shepherds = the quartos print sleep rule (perhaps this is supposed to be sheep rule ?), emended to shepherds by Dyce. = sailor. = ie. on his boat. = heavy seas.
28	That see the seaman floating on the surge ,	= though the line is understandable as shown, Dyce emends comes springing to conspiring ; another early commentator, cited by Bullen, suggests up-springing .
	The threatening winds comes springing with the floods
30	To overwhelm and drown his crazèd keel , His tackes torn, his sails borne overboard,	= broken, damaged. = ie. vessel. = ropes or wires used to secure certain sails. ¹ = carried.
32	How pale, like vallow flowers, the captain stands	32: pale = ie. from fear. vallow = ie. fallow, meaning reddish-yellow in colour; ¹ Dyce emends, perhaps correctly, to yellow ; vallow , still a rare word in 1593, was typically used to describe the colour of deer, not flowers. Bullen emends this to mallow , a type of flower which grows in wastelands, which can be a pale-yellow, but is usually purplish. ¹ captain = printed as mountaine in the quartos, emended by Dyce.

	Upon his hatches , waiting for his jerk ,	33: his hatches = Dyce emends this, probably correctly, to the hatches , the normal contemporary wording; the hatches are moveable planks above a ship's hold. ¹
34	Wringing his hands that ought to play the pump, May blame his fear that laboureth not for life:	his jerk = the blow or thrust of the sea that will capsizes the boat or throw the sailor overboard to his death. ¹
36	So thou, poor soul, may tell a servile tale,	= work, ie. "be working".
38	May counsel me; but I that prove the pain May hear thee talk but not redress my harm.	35: ie. the captain may blame his fear for paralyzing him, and thus preventing him from doing anything that may save his life.
40	But ghastly death already is addressed To glean the latest blossom of my life: My spirit fails me. Are these friars come?	= perhaps meaning "unworthy", or perhaps just the wrong word; ³ Deighton suggests civil , meaning "placid", and Bullen proposes suasive or soothing .
42		= ie. "am experiencing". ²
44	Re-Enter [Lady with] King Edward and Lancaster in Friars' weeds.	= repair, set right. ¹
46	K. Edw. Dominus vobiscum.	= collect. = final.
48	Lanc. Et cum spiritu tuo.
50	Qu. Elin. Draw near, grave fathers, and approach my bed. — Forbear our presence , ladies, for a while.	= clothing, ie. habits; the brothers are disguised as monks.
52	And leave us to our secret conference .	Dodsley points out that the motif of a husband taking his wife's confession while in a monk's disguise was a common one, particularly in contemporary Italian literature.
54	[Exeunt Joan and Ladies.]
56	K. Edw. What cause hath moved your royal majesty To call your servants from their country's bounds , For to attend your pleasure here in England's court?	46: Latin: "the Lord be with you."
58		48: Latin: "and with thy spirit."
60	Qu. Elin. See you not, holy friars, mine estate , My body weak, inclining to my grave?	= revered.
62
64	Lanc. We see and sorrow for thy pain, fair queen.
66	Qu. Elin. By these external signs of my defects, Friars, conjecture mine internal grief.	= ie. "leave us".
68	My soul, ah, wretched soul, within this breast, Faint for to mount the heavens with wings of grace, A hundred by-flocking troops of sin,	= private conversation.
		65-6: "from my deteriorating outward appearance, try to judge the turmoil that is in my soul."
		these external = emended by Dyce from this eternal .
		conjecture mine internal = we have adopted a hybrid emendation, combining elements of the suggestions of various editors to change the quartos' nonsensical consecrate mine ineternal .
		= ie. despairs.
		69: "accompanied as I am by a hundred sins".
		Dodsley perhaps over-emends the line in suggesting

		"And hindered is by flocking troops of sin".
70	That stop my passage to my wished bowers .	= desired dwelling, ie. Heaven; the quarto printed howres (ie. hours) for bowers , emended by Dyce.
72	K. Edw. The nearer, Elinor , so the greatest hope of health:	72: Elinor = as the early editors point out, this may be too familiar a form of address to use to the queen, and should be omitted. greatest = emended by Dyce to greater .
	And deign to us for to impart your grief ,	73: "and think it fit to share (impart) your grief with us". grief = appears as quiet in the quartos, emended by Dyce; Hook suggests guilt .
74	Who by our prayers and counsel ought to arm Aspiring souls to scale the heavenly grace.	= the sense is, "should provide the necessary tools to". ¹
76	Qu. Elin. Shame and remorse doth stop my course of speech.	77: Elinor is too ashamed of her sins to repeat them to the friars.
78	K. Edw. Madam, you need not dread our conference , Who, by the order of the holy church, Are all anointed to sacred secrecy.	= conversation.
80		81: ie. "were sworn to secrecy when we took our vows." anointed = technically refers to the applying of oil during consecration to office; Dyce emends to enjoined .
82		= ie. case. = "betray myself", ie. "reveal my sins."
84	Qu. Elin. Did I not think, nay, were I not assured, Your wisdoms would be silent in that cause , No fear could make me to bewray myself . But, gentle fathers, I have thought it good Not to rely upon these Englishmen,	87: Elinor fears that any confession she makes to English clergy will be repeated and reach the king. = integrity. ¹ = welfare.
86		= because. = closely concerns.
88	But on your troths , you holy men of France: Then, as you love your life and England's weal , Keep secret my confession from the king; For why my story nearly toucheth him, Whose love compared with my loose delights, With many sorrows that my heart affrights.	92-93: "whose love for me, when compared to my sinful transgressions, brings sorrow to my fearful heart."
90		= ie. is filled with apprehension.
92
94	Lanc. My heart misgives .
96	K. Edw. Be silent, fellow Friar.
98
100	Qu. Elin. In pride of youth, when I was young and fair, And gracious in the King of England's sight, The day before that night his highness should Possess the pleasure of my wedlock's bed,	100: ie. "and attractive to Edward".
102		101-2: poetically, the day before Edward and Elinor were to be married.
104	Caitiff , accursèd monster as I was, His brother Edmund, beautiful and young,	= miserable wretch.
106	Upon my bridal couch by my consent Enjoyed the flower and favour of my love, And I became a traitress to my lord .	104: this description of Edmund contravenes the historical rumour that the prince may have been a hunchback.
108		= a monosyllable.
110	[The King beholds his Brother woefully.]	= Edward.
112	K. Edw. Facinus scelus, infandum nefas!	= regards or looks at.
		= Latin: "a criminal outrage! an unspeakable deed!" ³⁴

114	Lanc. Madam, through sickness, weakness of your wits, 'twere very good to bethink yourself before you speak.	= ie. "because of your". = emended from and by Dyce. 114-5: 'twere...speak = "it would be a good idea for you to think through what you want to say before you say anything."
116		= know.
118	Qu. Elin. Good father, not so weak, but that, I wot , My heart doth rent to think upon the time .	= split, ie. break. = ie. "reflect on this deed of mine."
120	But why exclaims this holy friar so? O, pray, then, for my faults, religious man!	119: Elinor is naturally surprised that her confessor would even imply she should hold anything back; a death-bed confessor would normally encourage the dying individual to reveal everything, so as not to imperil his or her soul by seeking to hide anything from God.
122	K. Edw. 'Tis charity in men of my degree : To sorrow for our neighbours' heinous sins:	= rank, ie. position.
124	And, madam, though some promise love to you,
126	And zeal to Edmund, brother to the king, I pray the heavens you both may soon repent.
128	But might it please your highness to proceed?
130	Qu. Elin. Unto this sin a worser doth succeed ;	124-5: Dyce notes how these lines make no sense.
132	For, Joan of Acon, the supposèd child And daughter of my lord the English king, Is basely born , begotten of a friar, Such time as I was there arrived in France.	= follow.
134	His only true and lawful son, my friends, He is my hope, his son that should succeed ,	= ie. born of a low-ranking father. = by. = printed as their anued in the quartos; the emendation is Dodsley's.
136	Is Edward of Carnarvon, lately born.	Chronologically speaking, Elinor could not possibly have conceived Joan while in France; Elinor was already pregnant in 1271 when she and Edward arrived in Palestine, where she soon gave birth to a daughter, Juliana, who died only a few months later. Joan was born the following year.
138	Now all the scruples of my troubled mind I sighing sound within your reverent ears.
140	O, pray, for pity! pray, for I must die. Remit , my God, the folly of my youth!
	My groaning spirit attends thy mercy-seat .	134-5: Hook suggests lines 134-5 would make a bit more sense if they were interchanged; line 134 better leads into line 136; an alternate improvement to these lines is Dyce's suggestion to emend line 135's He is my hope to His only hope . His (line 134) = ie. Edward's. succeed = ie. follow the current king onto the throne.
		= recently. = misgivings. ¹ = speak, a verb.
		= ie. "do not punish". ¹
142	Fathers, farewell; commend me to my king, Commend me to my children and my friends, And close mine eyes, for death will have his due.	141: groaning spirit = the quarto prints groaned spirits ; the early editors preferred to emend this to grievèd spirit , but contemporary literature frequently describes spirits as groaning ; spirit is a monosyllable. mercy-seat = the throne of God; mercy-seat originally referred to the gold lid of the Arc of the Covenant. ¹
144		= remember.

[Queen Elinor dies.]

146: in this final scene, the queen's evils reach their climax, forever imprinting in the audience's collective mind a picture of one of the wickedest royal women in English history.

Elinor died at Harby on 28 November 1290.

Elinor's Character: the real Elinor of Castile remained a loyal wife to Edward for the entire time of their marriage. Edward's reign benefited from the fact that Elinor, unlike some previous queens, never dabbled in politics or ever created her own rival faction of political operatives.

Unfortunately, these qualities alone were not enough to win her a favourable public reputation in her lifetime. To begin with, Elinor was a foreigner, and one who never made any effort to learn to speak English. She also had been known to spend much of her time working to increase her personal wealth by taking possessions of castles whenever their owners found themselves in suffocating debt; in return for forgiving those debts - usually to Jewish lenders - the property in question would be gifted over to Elinor. Morris notes a pithy rhyme making the rounds in the late 13th century:

*"The king would like to get our gold,
The queen, our manors fair, to hold."
(Morris, pp. 225-231).*

= ie. eyes.

= lascivious lures. = poison, hence ruin.

150: "even the fiery red metal pyropus could never reflect"; but as Dodsley notes, lines 150-1 don't really make any sense.

Pyropus = the Roman naturalist Pliny the Elder, in his encyclopedic work Natural History, describes pyropus as an alloy of copper and small amounts of gold, which, when employed in thin leaves, "acquires a fiery red color".³⁶

We may note the quartos print Pirpus, properly emended by Dyce.

= defect, ie. sin. = ie. "could you have committed against".

= by.

= ie. Elinor.

155-8: Edward is bemoaning the fact that Elinor's eyes and beauty should be a haven for salacious thoughts, but the exact purpose of the historical and mythological allusions in these lines is unclear.

155: reference to Cleopatra, the queen with whom Julius Caesar carried on a passionate affair during his time in Egypt.

156-7: obscure in the extreme, notes Dodsley.

157: the reference is to the murderous Gorgon monster Medusa, with her famous hair of snakes, whose face, when glanced at, brought instant death.

looks = Dyce wonders if this should locks.

stained = "so excelled as to bring a stain on." (Dyce, p. 412).

Medusa's = the quartos print Melisaes; though all the K. Edw. Blushing I shut these thine enticing lamps,

The wanton baits that made me suck my bane.

Pyropus' hardened flames did ne'er reflect
More hideous flames than from my breast arise.

What fault more vile unto thy dearest lord
Our daughter base-begotten of a priest,
And Ned, my brother, partner of my love!

O, that those eyes that lightened Caesar's brain,

O, that those looks that mastered Phoebus' brand,
Or else those looks that stained Medusa's far, editions emend this to Medusa 's, Hook identifies a couple of obscure Melissas from mythology; but no matter what, Peele's intent here remains lost.

158	Should shrine deceit , desire, and lawless lust!	158: shrine = enshrine. deceit = the quartos print discreet , emended by Dyce. Hook, however, keeps deceit , identifying a pair of parallel phrases in discreet desire and lawless lust . lawless = ie. adulterous.
160	Unhappy king, dishonoured in thy stock ! Hence, feignèd weeds, unfeignèd is my grief.	= unlucky. = descendants or family. 160: "I remove my false clothes (ie. his disguise), but my grief is genuine."
162	Lanc. Dread prince , my brother, if my vows avail ,	162: Dread prince = common formula for addressing a monarch. dread = awe-inspiring. if my vows avail = ie. "if my swearing (that I am innocent) can persuade you".
164	I call to witness Heaven in my behalf; If zealous prayer might drive you from suspect ,	= suspicion.
166	I bend my knees , and humbly crave this boon , That you will drive misdeeds out of your mind.	= Edmund kneels before Edward. = "beg this favour". = ie. "these evil or sinful acts".
168	May never good betide my life, my lord, If once I dreamed upon this damnèd deed!	167-8: "may no good ever come to me if I ever dreamed of doing anything like this!"
170	But my deceasèd sister and your queen, Afflicted with recureless maladies,	= ie. sister-in-law.
172	Impatient of her pain, grew lunatic, Discovering errors never dreamed upon.	= incurable.
174	To prove this true, the greatest men of all Within their learnèd volumes do record	= revealing transgressions. ¹ = ie. all history. = books.
	That all extremes end in naught but extremes.	175: the sense may be something like, "extreme circumstances always leads to exaggeration." But Dodsley notes the meaning is lost here, and a line may have dropped out.
176	Then think, O king, her agony in death Bereaved her sense and memory at once,	end = the quartos mysteriously print and al and here; the emendation to end is Mitford's.
178	So that she spoke she knew nor how nor what.	= robbed.
180	K. Edw. Sir, sir, fain would your highness hide your faults	180f: Edward addresses Edmund with distancing formality. fain...highness = "your highness would like to".
	By cunning vows and glozing terms of art;	= "with clever avowals and plausible-sounding phrases."
182	And well thou mayst delude these listening ears, Yet never assuage by proof this jealous heart.	182-3: "you may be able to fool my ears, but you can never, regardless of what evidence you present, allay my suspicious or apprehensive heart."
184	Traitor, thy head shall ransom my disgrace. –	= ie. pay the price for.
186	Daughter of darkness , whose accusèd bower The poet feigned to lie upon Avernus ,	185-8: Edward apostrophizes to the goddess Nemesis, who represents personified Jealousy (line 188), or jealous retribution. She is the daughter of Erebus, the primordial goddess of personified darkness .

	Whereas Cimmerian darkness checks the sun,	The poet = the Roman Virgil, who described Avernus in the Aenied . ⁷ lie = the quartos print live , emended by Dyce to lie . Avernus = properly a lake in Italy, but identified in myth as the entrance to the underworld.
188	Dread Jealousy, afflict me not so sore!	187: Whereas = where. Cimmerian darkness = the land of the Cimmerians, located somewhere in middle-Asia, was proverbial for its darkness. checks = obscures, occludes.
	Fair Queen Elinor could never be so false: –
190	Ay, but she 'vowed these treasons at her death, A time not fit to fashion monstrous lies. –	188: Dread = ie. dreaded; the quartos print Davids , emended by Dodsley; Hook proposes damned . sore = sorely, ie. severely. = untrue.
192	Ah, my ungrateful brother as thou art, Could not my love, nay, more, could not the law,	190-1: it has long been believed that death-bed confessions are more likely to be true, since the confessor would not jeopardize his or her soul by lying at the moment he or she is about to meet God.
194	Nay, further, could not nature thee allure
	For to refrain from this incestuous sin? Haste from my sight!	194: nature = familial relationship, ie. the fact that Edmund is Edward's brother. allure = entice, ie. prevent. = ie. "get out of".
198	[Exit Lancaster.]
200	[To those within] Call Joan of Acon here. –
202	The luke-warm spring distilling from his eyes, His oaths, his vows, his reasons wrested with remorse	= poetically, tears. = ie. Edmund's. = twisted, perverted. ²
204	From forth his breast, – impoisoned with suspect , Fain would I deem that false I find too true.	= suspicion. = "I wish I could believe (his assertions) to be".
206	[Enter Joan.]
208	Joan. I come to know what England's king commands.
210	I wonder why your highness greets me thus, With strange regard and unacquainted terms.	210: with a distant look and manner of talking to her - though he has not said anything yet. Bullen assumes that Edward cries out expressions of grief as Joan enters.
212	K. Edw. Ah, Joan, this wonder needs must wound thy breast, For it hath well-nigh slain my wretched heart.	= must necessarily. = nearly.
214	Joan. What, is the queen, my sovereign mother, dead?
216	Woe's me, unhappy lady, woe-begone!
218	K. Edw. The queen is dead; yet, Joan, lament not thou:	= mourn.
220	Poor soul, guiltless art thou of this deceit, That hath more cause to curse than to complain.
222	Joan. My dreadful soul, assailed with dolesful speech, Join s me to bow my knees unto the ground,	= ie. full of dread. = sorrowful. 223: Joan kneels. Join s = enjoins, ie. compels.

224	Beseeching your most royal majesty To rid your woeful daughter of suspect .	= suspicion; Joan has no idea what Edward is driving at, and naturally worries that she has committed some transgression.
226
228	K. Edw. Ay, daughter, Joan? poor soul, thou art deceived! The king of England is no scornèd priest.	228: Edward means that Joan should not get down on her knees as if she is going to confess to him; this line is ironic, of course, given the charade that Edward has just completed.
230	Joan. Was not the Lady Elinor your spouse, And am not I the offspring of your loins?
232
234	K. Edw. Ay, but when ladies list to run astray, The poor supposèd father wears the horn ,	= desire. = ie. "is the one who is cheated on"; hardly a play exists in the old canon, it seems, that does not refer at least once to the proverbial horns said to grow on the forehead of a cuckolded husband.
	And pleating leave their liege in princes' laps.	235: a wholly unintelligible line which has attracted a lot of attention and proposed solutions over the centuries. Line 235 clearly refers to cheating wives, so Mitford's suggestion to transpose lines 233 and 234 makes sense. Beyond that, there has been little agreement over what else to do with line 235. (1) Mitford's proposed emendation: " And leave their plighted liege in princes' laps. " Here their plighted liege would mean something like "the lord to whom they are promised". (2) Bullen would change pleating to fleeting , but notes the line still makes little sense. (3) a less drastic fix might be to emend pleating to bleating (like a goat) and in for for , or perhaps go a step further than that to " And leave their bleating liege for princes' laps, " thus assigning the bleating to the husband with the goat-like horns. (4) pleating was also a common spelling for pleading , so here is one more alternative: " And leave their pleading liege for princes' laps. "
236	Joan, thou art daughter to a lecherous friar; A friar was thy father, hapless Joan;	= unlucky.
238	Thy mother in profession , 'vowed no less,	238: profession = declaration or avowal; but Dyce's emendation to confession makes sense too. ' vowed ' = avowed, ie. confessed. ¹
	And I, yild wretch, which sorrowed heard no less .	239: yild = vile. heard no less = ie. "heard it all."
240	Joan. What, am I, then, a friar's base-born brat ?	241: base-born = born of low-ranking parents. brat = child of no importance (without the modern contemptuous implication). ²
242	Presumptuous wretch, why prease I 'fore my king?	242: for Joan, the consequences of this revelation are devastating; at a minimum, she can no longer presume a close and affectionate relationship with Edward, the man she thought was her beloved father. prease = press. ³
	How can I look my husband in the face? Why should I live since my renown is lost? Away, thou wanton weed! hence, world's delight!	= reputation. = luxurious clothing.

	[She falls groveling on the ground.]	= face-downward. ¹
248
250	K. Edw. L'orecchie abbassa, come vinto e staneo Destrier c'ha in boeca il fren, gli sproni al fianco, –	249-250: these two lines are from Canto XX, stanza 131, of the Italian epic poem Orlando Furioso , written in the early 16th century by Lodovico Ariosto. The lines are part of a broadly comic passage in which a character, one Zembino, has lost a single-combat in which the loser must ride with an old hag. In these two lines, Zembino is compared to an old horse.
		Edward thus is expressing the necessity for one to accept whatever fate has in store for one. Here is the translation: Stands like tired courser, who in pensive fit, Hangs down his ears, controlled by spur and bit".³⁷
252	O sommo Dio, come I giudicii umani Spesso offuscati son da un nembo oscuro! –	251-2: from the same poem, Canto X, stanza 15: "Almighty God, how fallible and vain, Is human judgment, dimmed by clouds obscure!"³⁷
		We note that the quartos print an epically mangled version of all these Italian lines.
254	Hapless and wretched, lift up thy heavy head; Curse not so much at this unhappy chance;	= burdened by sorrow.
	Unconstant Fortune still will have her course.	= unfortunate falling out of events. ¹
256
258	Joan. My king, my king, let Fortune have her course: – Fly thou, my soul, and take a better course. Ay's me , from royal state I now am fall'n! –	255: fickle (Unconstant) Fortune will always (still) have her way; personified Fortune was frequently portrayed as arbitrarily raising and lowering people's circumstances.
		= flee.
260	You purple springs that wander in my veins, And whilom wont to feed my heavy heart,	= exclamation of woe. = condition, situation.
262	Now all at once make haste , and pity me.
		260: poetic description of her blood.
		= "which were accustomed to flow to my sorrowful heart".
		262-5: a long-winded way of asking her blood to dry up, so she may die.
		make haste = "act quickly", an imperative. ¹
		= this is the third time Joan has used the word course in the course of 7 lines - perhaps a lightly sarcastic repetition of Edward's use of the word in line 255.
264	And stop your powers, and change your native course ;
266	Dissolve to air, your lukewarm bloody streams, And cease to be, that I may be no more. –	267: Joan alludes to the customary act of tearing one's hair when one grieves.
	Your curlèd locks, draw from this cursèd head:	= "cast off her ostentatious appearance".
268	Abase her pomp , for Joan is basely born! – Ah, Gloucester, thou, poor Gloucester, hast the wrong ! –	= "you are the most injured party here!"
	Die, wretch! haste death, for Joan hath lived too long.	= hurry.
270	[She suddenly dies at the Queen's bed's feet.]	Joan's Death: Gloucester actually had predeceased Joan, dying in 1295. Joan had subsequently fallen in love with Ralph de Monthermer, one of her squires, and the couple secretly married in 1297. Edward was of course outraged that his daughter had married without his permission or knowledge - never mind the lowly background of her husband - even going so far as to briefly imprison the bridegroom; soon enough, however, Edward relented, and Monthermer eventually came into great favour with Edward - he must have been an impressive man.

		Joan passed away at Clare, Suffolk, on 23 April 1307, and was interred at the Augustine priory there.⁹
272	K. Edw. Revive thee, hapless lady; grieve not thus. –	= unlucky.
274	In vain speak I, for she revives no more.
	Poor hapless soul, thy own repeated moans
276	Hath wrought thy sudden and untimely death. –	= Dodsley has emended the quartos' own espected , but Bullen's emendation to unexpected might be preferable.
	Lords, ladies, haste!	= brought about.
278	[Re-enter Ladies with Gloucester and Lords running.]
280
	Ah, Gloucester, art thou come?	279: there is an additional stage direction in the quartos which calls for the princess' body to be removed from the stage, which Dyce, and hence we, omit. The end of the play has dissolved into such a typographical disaster and editorial nightmare that it is impossible to say if and when the bodies of Elinor and Joan are carried out. ³
282	Then must I now present a tragedy.
	Thy Joan is dead: yet grieve thou not her fall;
284	She was too base a spouse for such a prince .	= unworthy, because of her low rank. = ie. lord, noble.
286	Gloc. Conspire you, then, with heavens to work my harms? –
	O sweet assuager of our mortal 'miss,	287: assuager = reliever, ie. God.
288	Desirèd death, deprive me of my life,	mortal = emended from martial by Dyce.
	That I in death may end my life and love!	'miss' = amiss, ie. misfortune. ³
290	K. Edw. Gloucester, thy king is partner of thy heaviness ,	= sorrow.
292	Although nor tongue nor eyes bewray his mean ;	= "betrays his grief"; Edward is stoic.
	For I have lost a flower as fair as thine,	mean = moan, ie. laments. ³
294	A love more dear, for Elinor is dead.
	But since the heavenly ordinance decrees	= divine will. ²
296	That all things change in their prefixèd time,	= alter their form, ¹ ie. die. = predetermined.
	Be thou content, and bear it in thy breast,
298	Thy swelling grief, as needs I must mine.
	Thy Joan of Acon, and my queen deceased,
300	Shall have that honour as beseems their state . –	= is fitting for. = royal status.
	You peers of England, see in royal pomp
302	These breathless bodies be entombèd straight,
	With ' tirèd colours ' covered all with black.
304	Let Spanish steeds, as swift as fleeting wind,	303: briefly, ie. "everyone shall wear black."
		'tired colours = colourful attire; the quartos read tried colors , emended by Dyce.
	Convey these princes to their funeral:	304-9: Edward gives orders for the funeral procession which will return Elinor's body to London.
306	Before them let a hundred mourners ride.	Elinor's corpse was embalmed in Lincoln; her funeral procession departed for London on 4 December 1290.⁹
	In every time of their enforced abode,
308	Rear up a cross in token of their worth ,	= persons of royal blood. ²
	Whereon fair Elinor's picture shall be placed.	307-9: Edward orders that in every town in which Elinor's funeral procession stops for the night, an ornamental cross should be constructed as a memorial.
		worth = the quartos print work , emended by Dyce.
		But Didn't Elinor Die Near London? yes, our play's Elinor died within a short day's ride to Westminster, so Edward's instructions here, which are consistant with Elinor's real life death near Lincoln, are unapropos.

310	Arrived at London, near our palace-bounds ,
312	Inter my lovely Elinor, late deceased; And, in remembrance of her royalty,	= Edward refers to the vast royal palace that once existed in Westminster; Edward actually had been born in that palace. ³⁹
314	Erect a rich and stately carvèd cross, Wheron her stature shall with glory shine,
316	And henceforth see you call it Charing-cross; For why the chariest and the choicest queen,	311: Elinor was buried at Westminster Abbey.
		= statue. ¹
		= "because (For why) she was the dearest (chariest) and most exquisite queen". ¹
		chariest = the quartos print chancest , emended by Dyce; as emended, line 316 now has Edward directing that Charing Green be considered named after a personal quality of the queen, ie. her being the most chariy , meaning dearest or most precious, of all women. ¹
		The editors note the existence of an old tradition that the name Charing comes from the French chere reine , meaning "dear queen".
318	That ever did delight my royal eyes, There dwell in darkness whilst I die in grief. – But, soft! what tidings with these pursuivants ?	319: soft = hold on! tidings = news.
320		pursuivants = royal messengers. ¹ Two messengers enter, one from Wales, the other from Scotland. ⁴ Only one of them speaks, on behalf of both of them.
322		[Enter Messengers.]
324	Mess. Sir Roger Mortimer, with all success , As erst your grace by message did command,	= the quartos print Sussex here. = earlier, previously.
326	Is here at hand, in purpose to present Your highness with his signs of victory.	= tokens.
328	And trothless Baliol, their accursèd king, With fire and sword doth threat Northumberland.	327-8: unless these lines are misplaced, or a line is missing - which is highly likely - we are supposed to believe that John Baliol has escaped whatever restrictions Edward had placed on his movements, and is now reviving Scottish insurrection. trothless = faithless. threat = threaten.
330	K. Edw. How one affliction calls another over! First death torments me, then I feel disgrace!	Northumberland = the most northerly county in England.
332	And false Baliol means to brave me too; But I will find provision for them all:	331: after this line, the following line appears in the quartos: "Again, Lluellen he rebels in Wales"; but Lluellen died in Scene XVII, and so Dyce, properly, omits this bonus line. The errors in the quartos are compounding as we approach the conclusion of the play. = defy.

334	My constancy shall conquer death and shame.	334: in the climactic blunder of the quartos, eight lines which represent a variation of the lines spoken by Edward at Scene XIII.135f appear after our line 335, which of course all the editors omit.
336	[Exeunt all except Gloucester.]	= single, alone. = sit down.
338	Gloc. Now, Joan of Acon, let me mourn thy fall. –	342: the quartos print this line as " Thy wedlocke vowed how ought have I beheld? " Dyce emends as best he can, but the line, he notes, is "past cure".
340	Sole , here alone, now set thee down and sigh.	Grimly humorous is the completely misplaced stage direction which appears in the quartos between our lines 342 and 343: " Enter Mortimer with the head. "
342	Sigh, hapless Gloucester, for thy sudden loss: Pale death, alas, hath banished all thy pride, Thy wedlock-vows! How oft have I beheld
344	Thy eyes, thy looks , thy lips, and every part, How nature stroved in them to shew her art, In shine, in shape, in colour, and compare!	= perhaps a misprint for locks , notes Dyce.
346	But now hath death, the enemy of love, Stained and deformed the shine, the shape, the red ,	= Dyce emends the quartos' store . = show, ie. demonstrate.
348	With pale and dimness, and my love is dead.
350	Ah, dead, my love! vile wretch, why am I living? So willeth fate, and I must be contented:	= ie. the colour of her face.
352	All pomp in time must fade, and grow to nothing. Wept I like Niobe, yet it profits nothing :
354	Then cease, my sighs, since I may not regain her, And woe to wretched death that thus hath slain her!	= ie. yet weeping brings me no benefit."
356	[Exit.]	352-4: in Greek mythology, Niobe , proud of her twelve children (6 boys and 6 girls), bragged that she was superior to the gods, who vindictively slew all of the children; in mourning, Niobe went to Mt. Sypilus, where she was turned into stone, in which form she continued to mourn; when the snow melts, Niobe appears to weep. ⁴⁰
358	Yours, By George Peele,	359-360: this signed closing appears in the quartos; its appearance in the quartos is meant to indicate that the printers were working from Peele's original script.
360	Master of Arts in Oxenford.
	FINIS
		Postscript.
		Edward I spent his last years in endless warfare; 1297 saw Edward engaged in a futile campaign in France, made more frustrating by the failure of his international allies to come to his promised assistance; the same year saw the first of several invasions of Scotland, and the rise and fall of the great Scottish heroes William Wallace and Robert the Bruce, the latter whom had himself crowned king of Scotland in 1306.
		Finally, on 7 July 1307, the oversized, ferocious warrior-king known as the Hammer of the Scots passed away at Burgh-by-Sands as he was heading north for yet another invasion of Scotland.
		He left his bankrupt and exhausted nation in the hands of his son, the 23-year old Edward II; how this young monarch, who was already infamous for his questionably-close relationship to a French nobleman named Piers Gaveston, would respond to the heavy responsibility suddenly set on his shoulders, was still an open question. The answer can be found in Christopher Marlowe's great play, Edward II. The story of the next King Edward was not to be a happy one.

The last two decades of the 13th century saw a massive program of castle-building throughout Wales. While the immediate result of the presence of these fortresses - tight English control of Welsh legal and administrative life - was an unhappy burden for the Welsh to bear, for the modern traveller, Edward's public works have left an ineffable series of monumental medieval edifices, a testament to this long-gone man who dominated the English-speaking world for four decades all those centuries ago.

Lyrics to Blithe and Bonny, sung at the beginning of Scene VIII.

A blithe and bonny country lass,
heigh ho, the bonny lass!
Sate sighing on the tender grass and weeping said, will none come woo her.
A smicker boy, a lither swain,
heigh ho, a smicker swain!
That in his love was wanton fain, with smiling looks straight came unto her.

Whenas the wanton wench espied,
heigh ho, when she espied!
The means to make herself a bride,
she simpered smooth like Bonnybell:
The swain, that saw her squint-eyed kind,
heigh ho, squint-eyed kind!
His arms about her body twined, and: "Fair lass, how fare ye, well?"

The country kit said: "Well, forsooth, heigh ho, well forsooth!
But that I have a longing tooth,
a longing tooth that makes me cry."
"Alas!" said he, "what gars thy grief?
heigh ho, what gars thy grief?"
"A wound," quoth she, "without relief,
I fear a maid that I shall die."
"If that be all," the shepherd said,
heigh ho, the shepherd said!
"Ile make thee wife it gentle maid, and so recure thy malady."

Hereon they kissed with many an oath, heigh ho, with many an oath!
And fore God Pan did plight their troth, and to the church they hied them fast.
And God send every pretty peat,
heigh ho, the pretty peat!
That fears to die of this conceit, so kind a friend to help at last.

Reprinted from a reprint of Thomas Lodge's Rosalynde, Ginn and Co., Boston, MA, 1910.

George Peele's Invented Words and Phrases.

Like all writers of the era, George Peele made up words when he felt like it, usually by adding prefixes and suffixes to known words, combining words, or using a word in a way not yet used before. In addition, many phrases that Peele created were found attractive, and hence used again by later, other authors.

The following is a list of words and expressions from Edward I that research suggests may have been first used, or used in a certain way, by Peele in this play.

a. Words and Compound Words

arras-point bridegroom-like

by-flocking (though it is unclear if this is an error) calf's-head

Cambria-Briton

compeer-in-arms

coyly (first use meaning haughtily)

flig (for fledge)

gain-legged

hotshot

infract (first use to mean "broken") irregular (first use as a noun) island-tapestry

leave (according to the OED, this is the earliest use of leave in the modern sense of "to depart"; as the entry was updated in 2016, we may take this as reasonably authoritative)

love-holiday

negro-Moor

ominous (according to the OED, first use to mean prophetic of a good outcome)

oons (an interjection)

outsuffer

over-lour / over-lower over-preased

palace-bounds prize-corn

rumple (first use as a verb) sa ha / saw haw (hunting cry) size-ace throne (according to the OED, first use to refer to the occupant of a throne)

vail (according to the OED, first use to mean to throw down or to surrender) waiting-day war-drum

Welshman's hook

b. Expressions and Collocations

Collocations are words that are commonly, conventionally and familiarly used together (e.g. "blue sky"), but which when used collectively so do not rise to the level of what may be called an expression. All of the following expressions and collocations make their first appearance in Edward I, and were subsequently used by later writers, and some even continue to be used this day.

Those collocations in quotation marks indicate an exactly worded formula that was reused regularly by later writers.

as fit as a pudding for a friar's mouth

"at your majesty's command"

"Bacchus' vine"

"bloody-crested"
by sweet Saint Jerome
"canopy of state"
"characters of blood"
"child-bed pain(s)"

"court and camp" (though courts and camps had been used earlier; court and camp became very common) crack a blade

"English pride"
"fall to dice"

"fight it to the last" (precursor of fight to the last and fight to the last man) fit as a die

"fleeting wind"

"harmful weed"

to have a bout hit it home to hold one by the collar

"hot dog(s)" (different meaning than today)

"hot pincers"

how does all (inquiry of well-being)

(your) life is dearer to me than...

"loose delights"

to make a cipher

meridian signs (although meridional signs appeared earlier)

"more than flesh can bear"

"mountain vapours"

"new-closed up"

out of cash

purple springs (first use ever, to describe blood)

"put my hand(s) in my pocket(s)" (though hands in his pockets had been used previously)

"queen of one's heart"

"royal canopy" run (or thrust) a sword up to the hilts (though thrust a sword to the hilts was used earlier) to shrink (not) from any weather (or similar)

"soft bedding"

"Spanish brave"

Earliest appearance of stand with deliver, as a highwayman's command to his victim to hand over his or her money.

suck one's bane

swifter than a fleeting wind that's once (meaning "that's final")

"think the devil is/has come"

"thirsty sword"

as warm as wool

westward ho! (the cry of the Thames watermen)

"what can (I) do or say..."

the wind stands fair

"what will be shall be"

"winged honour"

COMPLETE LIST of FOOTNOTES

Footnotes in the text correspond as follows:

1. Oxford English Dictionary (OED) online.
2. Crystal, David and Ben. Shakespeare's Words. London, New York: Penguin, 2002.
3. Dyce, Rev. Alexander. The Dramatic and Poetical Works of Robert Greene and George Peele. London: George Routledge and Sons: 1874.
4. Bullen, A.H. The Works of George Peele, Vol. I. Boston: Houghton, Mifflin and Company, 1888.
5. Jones, Dan. The Plantagenets. New York: Penguin Books, 2012.
6. Sugden, Edward. A Topographical Dictionary to the Works of Shakespeare and His Fellow Dramatists. Manchester: The University Press, 1925.
7. Hook, Frank S. ed. Edward I. The Dramatic Works of George Peele, Vol. 2. General ed. Charles T. Prouty. New Haven: Yale University Press, 1961.
8. Holy Roman Empire Association Website. List of Holy Roman Emperors. Retrieved 8/24/2019: www.holyromanempireassociation.com/list-of-holy-roman-emperors.html.
9. Stephan, Leslie and Lee, Sydney, eds. Dictionary of National Biography. London: Smith, Elder, and Co., 1885-1900.
10. Brewer's Dictionary of Phrase and Fable. New York: Harper and Brothers Publishers, undated.
11. Hanson, Elissa. The Classroom Website. Who Was The First English King to Speak English? Retrieved 8/24/2019: www.theclassroom.com/first-english-king-speak-english-22560.html.
12. Encyclopaedia Britannica Website. Baybars I. Retrieved 8/25/2019: www.britannica.com/biography/Baybars-I.
13. Latin is Simple website. parturiunt montes, nasceret ridiculus mus. Retrieved 8/25/2019: www.latin-is-simple.com/en/vocabulary/phrase/1380/.
14. Theoi website. Rhea. Retrieved 9/26/2019: www.theoi.com/Titan/TitanisRhea.html.
15. Theoi website. Nephele. Retrieved 9/6/2019: www.theoi.com/Nymph/NymphNephele1.html.
16. Ancient History Encyclopedia website. The Saxons. Retrieved 8/29/2019: www.ancient.eu/Saxons/.
17. The History Herald website. The Danish Invasion. Retrieved 8/29/2019: www.thehistoryherald.com/Articles/British-Irish-History/Anglo-Saxon-500-1000/the-danish-invasion.
18. The Law Dictionary website. What is contra omnes gentes? Retrieved 8/31/2019: <https://thelawdictionary.org/contraomnes-gentes/>.
19. Vulgate.org website. Epistula Ad Galatas - Chapter 1. Retrieved 8/31/2019: http://vulgate.org/nt/epistle/galatians_1.htm.
20. Chappell, William. Popular Music of the Olden Time, Vol I. New York: Dover Publications, 1965.
21. Medieval London website. Cheapside. Retrieved 9/01/2019: <https://medievallondon.acf.fordham.edu/exhibits/show/medieval-london-sites/cheapside>.
22. Greek Mythology website. Aegeus. Retrieved 9/02/2019: www.greekmythology.com/Myths/Mortals/Aegeus/aegeus.html.
23. Greek Mythology website. Python. Retrieved 9/02/2019: www.greekmythology.com/Myths/Creatures/Python/python.html.
24. Skeat, Walter W. A Glossary of Tudor and Stuart Words. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1914.
25. Lublin, Robert I. Costuming the Shakespearean Stage. Abingdon: Routledge, 2016.
26. Balliol College website. History. Retrieved 9/03/2019: www.balliol.ox.ac.uk/about-balliol/history.
27. Encyclopaedia Britannica Website. Vulcan. Retrieved 9/05/2019: www.britannica.com/topic/Vulcan.
28. Dodsley, Robert, et al. A Select Collection of Old Plays, Vol. XI. London: Thomas White, Printer, 1827.
29. The Encyclopedia Britannica. 11th edition. New York: 1911.
30. Delabastita, Dirk and Hoenselaars, Ton. Multilingualism in the Drama of Shakespeare and His Contemporaries. Amsterdam: John Benjamins Publishing Company, 2015.

31. Franciscan Friars website. Franciscan Colors. Retrieved 9/12/2019: <https://ofm.org/blog/franciscan-colors/>.
32. Halliwell, James O. A Dictionary of Archaic and Provincial Words. London: John Russell Smith, 1878.
33. Roman, Luke and Monica. Aphrodite to Zeus, An Encyclopedia of Greek & Roman Mythology. New York: Checkmark Books, 2011.
34. Latin translation by classicist scholar Alison Parker.
35. Poetry in Translation website. Kline, A.S., trans. Horace: the Epistles. Retrieved 9/15/2019: www.poetryintranslation.com/PITBR/Latin/HoraceEpistlesBkIEpII.php.
36. Bostock, John, and Riley, H.T., transl. Pliny the Elder. The Natural History. London: Henry G. Bohn, 1855.
37. Rose, William Stewart, trans. Orlando Furioso. London: Henry G. Bohn, 1858.
38. Ross, David. Britain Express website. Eleanor Crosses. Retrieved 9/20/2019: www.britainexpress.com/History/eleanor-crosses.htm.
- 39: British History website. The royal palace of Westminster, from Old and New London, Volume III, 1878. Retrieved 9/20/2019: www.british-history.ac.uk.old-new-london/vol3/pp491-502.
40. Encyclopaedia Britannica website. Niobe. Retrieved 9/20/2019: www.britannica.com/topic/Niobe-Greek-mythology.
41. Mitford, the Reverend J. Gentleman's Magazine, February 1833.
42. Deighton, Kenneth. The Old Dramatists: Conjectural Readings. Westminster: Archibald Constable and Co., 1896.
43. Catholic Saints website. Saint Onuphrius. Retrieved 9/22/2019: <http://catholicsaints.info/saint-onuphrius/>.
44. Taylor, Gary. Thomas Middleton: Lives and After-lives, pp. 25-58. From Thomas Middleton, The Collected Works, edited by Gary Taylor and John Lavagnino. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 2010.
45. Morris, Marc. A Great and Terrible King. New York: Pegasus Books, 2009.
46. Encyclopaedia Britannica website. Fealty and Homage. Retrieved 10/03/2019: www.britannica.com/topic/homage.
- 47: European Royal History website. History of the Titles of the Prince of Wales. Conclusion. Retrieved 10/07/2019: <https://europeanroyalhistory.wordpress.com/2018/11/13/3898/>.
48. Barry One-Off website. List of Lord Mayors of the City of London from 1189 till 2018/19. Retrieved 10/09/2019: <http://barryoneoff.co.uk/mayors.html>.
49. Nares, Robert et al. A Glossary, etc. London: Reeves and Turner, 1888.